attachment is wrongly released and the order of release is set aside in appeal, the attachment will be deemed to have continued and an alienation made between the date of the order of release and the date of the order in appeal, will be void against all claims enforceable under the attachment.³ See also Note 4 to O. 21 R. 55, infra. Similarly, where a claim is allowed and the property is released from attachment, such release is only provisional and subject to the result of the suit under O. 21 R. 63. Where therefore the order in the claim petition is set aside in the suit, the attachment is revived so as to affect the alienations made in the interval.⁴

In the case of an attachment before judgment the attachment comes to an end upon the dismissal of the suit and is not revived upon the reversal of the judgment in appeal.⁵ The reason is that O. 38 R. 9 contains no provision corresponding to O. 21 R. 63 which makes the order in the claim case and the release from attachment thereupon subject to a regular suit.⁶ See also Note 1 to O. 38 R. 9 infra.

10. "Private transfer or delivery of the property attached or of any interest therein." — The word "transfer" is used in the most generic sense and includes all species of contract which pass real rights in property from one person to another.⁷ But it is not confined to transfers by contract. A transfer purporting to be made by a deed of appointment is a "transfer."⁸

The transfer contemplated by the Section is a transfer between living persons and therefore does not include a devise by will.⁹ A "private transfer" means a voluntary transfer such as a sale, mortgage, lease or gift and not a transfer by operation of law, such as an involuntary sale under a decree of a Court¹⁰ or the enforced execution of a conveyance or assignment in obedience to the order of the Court.¹¹ Thus, a transfer effected by an award which has been given effect to by a decree¹² or a conveyance executed in obedience to a decree for specific performance of a contract of sale,⁷ is not a 'private transfer' within the meaning of this Section. But it has been held that where a transfer is embodied in a decree but the decree is entirely based on an agreement between the parties, the transfer is a 'private' transfer.^{8a} A vesting order in insolvency is a transfer by operation of law and is not within the mischief of this Section.⁸ But where the adjudication order is made by a foreign Insolvency Court, it cannot have the effect of prevailing over a prior attachment effected by the order of a British Indian Court.^{8a}

The prohibition under the Section extends to all private transfers and delivery of property by which the attachment is defeated by the property or interest therein being put out of the reach of the attaching creditor.⁹ But an act which is consistent with the proper management of the property is not barred by the Section.¹⁰ A consent given by heirs of a Mahomedan after his death, to a bequest made by him, does not amount to an alienation of property.¹¹

The operation of the right of survivorship among members of a Hindu joint family is not a private transfer, but it has been held independently of this Section that when a judgment-debtor dies after an attachment in execution is effected on his undivided share, the right of survivorship of his co-parceners does not prevail over the rights enforceable under the attachment.¹² Where, however, the judgment-debtor dies after an attachment before judgment but before it is converted into an attachment in execution, the right of survivorship would prevail over the attachment.¹³ The reason is that when the right by survivorship accrued, there was not in existence any competing right or title at all.

An assignment of a decree under attachment is a "transfer of a property" within the meaning of this Section.¹⁴ Where the karita of a Hindu joint family business is adjudicated an insolvent, the power of such karita to dispose of joint family property for discharging business obligations vests in the Official Receiver. But such power in the hands of the Official Receiver will be subject to the same qualifications as it was

The attachment referred to in the Section is the particular attachment under which a claim is being made⁸ and when an alienation is not contrary to such attachment the Section has no application.⁹ Consequently, an alienation, resulting in the satisfaction of the decree in execution of which the attachment is made, is not 'contrary to such attachment' within the meaning of the Section,¹⁰ whereas an alienation pending one attachment, in order to pay off another attaching creditor, is invalid as against the former.¹¹

Any payment to the judgment-debtor of an attached debt contrary to the attachment will be void under this Section as against all claims enforceable under the attachment and the mere fact that the debtor does not pay money into the hands of the judgment-debtor but to somebody else will not make it any the less a payment contrary to the attachment, if the payment is voluntarily made at the instance of or for the benefit of the judgment-debtor.¹²

12. Transfer is void only as against claims enforceable under the attachment.—A private transfer is not wholly void but is void only as against claims enforceable under the attachment and only to the extent necessary to meet those claims.¹³ The only persons therefore who are entitled to object to an alienation pending attachment are those who have legal claims enforceable thereunder.¹⁴ Thus, a transferee from the decree-holder,⁴ a claimant for the rateable distribution of assets⁵ and an auction-purchaser at the sale held in pursuance of the attachment,⁶ are all persons whose claims are enforceable under the attachment and who can object to the private transfer pending attachment.

The attachment referred to in the Section is the attachment in respect of which the property was sold and it is that attachment alone which can be employed for the purpose of impugning a private alienation.⁷ Thus, where property attached in execution is alienated, but such attachment ceases by a dismissal of the application for execution under O. 21 R. 57 and the property is again brought to sale in pursuance of a second attachment, the alienation pending the first attachment is not void against the auction-purchaser in the sale held under the second attachment.⁸

If an attachment is not properly perfected, no claim can be enforced thereunder.⁹ Again, if the attachment comes to an end by the satisfaction of the decree in execution of which it was attached, all claims enforceable under the attachment also cease to be enforceable and the Section does not apply.¹⁰ Nor can a decree-holder who has not secured his title from the Court and has no longer any claim enforceable under the attachment, obtain any benefit from the provisions of this Section.¹¹

A who has mortgage rights over certain properties transfers the rights to B in order to discharge two other decree debts in execution of which those rights had been attached. B delays in discharging those debts and in the meanwhile C, in execution of another decree against A, attaches the monies retained by B to pay off the prior attaching creditors. Subsequent to this B pays off the decree debts. Is such payment valid against C? Yes. The reason is that A himself has no absolute rights to amounts retained by B but is subject to the latter's right to pay off the prior encumbrances. C's attachment of A's rights will therefore be also subject to the paramount rights of B to protect his title by paying off the prior creditors.¹²

Section 73 of the Code for rateable distribution of assets.² But in order that the Explanation may apply, two conditions must be satisfied —

1. there must be assets held by the Court, for otherwise there is no right to rateable distribution at all;³ and
2. the claim of the decree-holder must be one enforceable under the particular attachment in respect of which the assets have been realised.⁴

Illustrations

1. A obtains a decree against B and attaches his properties in execution. B transfers the property pending the attachment, to C. Subsequently X attaches the same properties in execution of his decree against B, brings it to sale and purchases it himself. Here if assets are held by the Court in X's execution, A will be entitled to rateable distribution, he having applied in execution before the X's attachment which cannot be enforced against the transfer to C which took place prior to that attachment.⁵
2. A obtains a decree against B and attaches his properties in execution. C also obtains a decree against B and applies for execution of his decree. B then transfers the property to D and discharges A's decree. Here no assets are received at all and C has no right to any rateable distribution. He cannot consequently question D's title to the property.⁶

It has been held by the Bombay⁷ and Madras⁸ High Courts that in order that a claim for rateable distribution may be 'enforceable' so as to defeat an alienation pending the attachment in respect of which assets are received, it is not necessary that the claimant should have been in existence on the date of the alienation, i.e., that the claimant should have obtained a decree and applied for execution before that date. The same view was taken in an earlier decision of the Calcutta High Court.⁹ The same High Court has however, in a later case, held that the claim should have been in existence on the date of the alienation.¹⁰ There does not seem to be anything in the Section itself which leads to the restricted interpretation adopted by the later decision of the Calcutta High Court. It is submitted that the Bombay and Madras views are correct.

of law and is not affected by Section 64. Where the judgment-debtor is adjudicated an insolvent, the whole of his property vests in the Official Receiver or Official Assignee for the benefit of the general body of creditors and an attaching creditor has no priority over the Official Receiver or Official Assignee. Under Section 34 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, the attaching creditor was entitled to the assets realised in execution or otherwise before the order of adjudication so that if execution had taken place and sale price deposited in Court before adjudication, the decree-holder was entitled to the sale proceeds as against the receiver.² This is now no longer law in view of the provisions of Section 51 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, which provides that "no person shall be entitled to the benefit of the execution against the receiver except in respect of assets realized in the course of the execution by sale or otherwise before the date of the admission of the petition."

Where property under attachment is transferred contrary to such attachment, the transfer is not absolutely void and so, where the debtor is adjudicated insolvent after the alienation, the property does not vest in the Official Receiver.³

An order for liquidation does not vest the property of the company in the liquidator and an attachment made on the property of the company at the instance of the decree-holder before the winding up of the company will prevail over the rights of the liquidator.³

15. Prior contract for sale of property.—It has been held in the under-mentioned cases¹ that an alienation of immovable property pending an attachment of such property can be avoided under this Section, although the alienation has been made in pursuance of a contract entered into before the attachment.

But a contrary view has been held in several cases. In Gutta Bapineedu v. Gutta Venkayya,² it was held by the High Court of Madras that as the contract entered into before attachment could be enforced under Section 27 (b) of the Specific Relief Act, against the transferee in court auction and the attaching creditor, the claim of the latter was not one enforceable under the attachment against the sale executed in pursuance of such a contract and therefore cannot prevail against the sale. In Babala Venkata Reddi v. Mangadu Yellappa Chetty,³ the same High Court rested the view on another ground. It held, following an earlier decision of the Calcutta High Court,⁴ that the contract of sale created an obligation annexed to the ownership of the property under Section 40 of the Transfer of Property Act and that the attachment and sale must be deemed to have been made of the property only subject to such obligation. The High Court of Rangoon has held the same view in the undermentioned case⁵ on yet another ground. In that case possession of the property had also been delivered to the promisee under the contract of sale prior to the attachment and it was held that the beneficial interest had been transferred before attachment, that what is aimed at by Section 64 is only the transfer of the beneficial interest and that therefore the mere conveyance of the legal title after the attachment is not affected by Section 64. The view held in *Babala Venkata Reddi's case*³ has also been taken by the Madras High Court in subsequent decisions.⁶ The Nagpur High Court has also held that this Section does not affect a transfer in pursuance of a contract entered into prior to the attachment.⁷

It is submitted that the second of the two views mentioned above seems to be the correct one. No doubt a mere contract for the sale of immovable property does not create any interest in the property. But the contract certainly creates an obligation annexed to the ownership of the property and as what is attached is the right, title and interest of the debtor in the property, the attachment cannot be free from any obligation to which the debtor is subject in respect of the property at the date of the attachment. As the learned Judges observed in Babala Venkata Reddi's case,³ "It does not seem to be sound sense that when a creditor attaches property which is subject to a particular obligation, he should be able to override it."

If an interest in the property is created only after the attachment, it is clearly within the terms of the Section and cannot prevail against claims enforceable under the attachment.

16. Objections as to attachment.—The onus of proving that an attachment prima facie legal is not legal is on the party pleading it.¹ But a judgment-debtor who consents to an attachment of an occupancy holding is not estopped from objecting to the sale of the holding on the ground of its non-transferability.² An attachment before judgment does not stand on the same footing as an attachment in execution; and a party who does not object to the attachment before judgment is not estopped from objecting to its validity after the decree.³ The question of non-observance of the formalities of attachment cannot be raised for the first time in appeal to the Privy Council.⁵

See also the undermentioned case⁶ where the Privy Council observed that the main purpose of attachment is to prevent the transfer or charging of the property by the judgment-debtor and held that the alleged irregularities in the attachment in the particular case did not justify the setting aside of the sale.

17. Waiver of benefit under the Section.—The Section being intended for the benefit of the attaching creditor, the benefit can be waived by him.¹ Waiver, however, is an intentional act and a clear act showing such an intention must be shown.² The mere fact that the decree-holder in taking out execution referred to a mortgage that had been executed pending attachment,³ or that such mortgage was notified in the proclamation of sale,⁴ will not amount to a waiver of the plea under Section 64. If however the decree-holder expressly permits its notification at the time of the sale, he cannot be permitted to plead the bar under Section 64.⁵

1. Legislative changes.—Two important changes have been introduced into the present Section—

1. The date of vesting of title in the auction-purchaser is the date of the sale and not the date of the sale certificate.
2. The decree under which the property is sold need not be subsisting at the time of the confirmation of the sale.

2. Scope and object of the Section.—A judicial sale, unlike a private one, is not complete immediately it takes place. It is liable to be set aside on appropriate proceedings taken under O. 21 Rr. 89 to 91. If no such proceedings are taken, or if taken are not successful, the sale will then be made absolute under O. 21 R. 92. Questions, therefore, arise as to whether the auction-purchaser is entitled to rents and profits during the period between the two dates, i.e., the date of the sale and the date of the certificate of sale. Again, there may be successive sales of the same property in execution of different decrees giving rise to questions of priority of title with reference to dates of confirmation. Questions as to the validity of private sales by auction-purchasers or judgment-debtors before the date of confirmation may also arise. In order to settle the law bearing on such questions, this Section lays down that though the property does not vest in the auction-purchaser till the date of confirmation, once the sale is confirmed and becomes absolute, the title of the auction-purchaser shall relate back to the date of the sale itself.

3. "Immoveable property."—See Section 16.

4. "Becomes absolute."—See O. 21 R. 92. As to when a judicial sale is void or voidable, see O. 21 Rr. 89 to 91 and Section 47 Notes 51 to 71.

5. Sale certificate.—See Order 21 Rule 94.

6. Effect of reversal of decree after confirmation.—See Note 58 to Section 47.

7. Effect of reversal of decree before confirmation.—Under the old Section there was a proviso that the decree must be subsisting on the date of the sale certificate for the property to vest in the purchaser.¹ This is now no longer necessary and a sale in favour of a bona fide purchaser not a party to the suit will not be set aside merely because the decree has been reversed before confirmation.²

As to the cases where a judicial sale may be set aside on the reversal of the decree, see Note 58 to Section 47.

8. "Shall be deemed to have vested."—Until the sale is confirmed, title does not vest in the purchaser.^{1a} But where, on confirmation, it does vest in him, it shall be deemed to have vested from the date of sale. In other words, the vesting relates back to the date of sale.¹ The fact that the sale certificate is issued on a later date than that of the confirmation, does not affect the vesting of title on the confirmation of the sale.²

The legal effect of the relation back of the vesting of the title to the date of the sale is that the auction-purchaser will be entitled to rights in the property and be liable to the obligations in respect of the same as from the date of sale. Thus, if there are accretions to the property between the date of sale and the date of confirmation, they would belong to him. But if the property is between those two dates sold for arrears of revenue, he would lose it completely.³

Though, according to the strict terms of Section 316 of the old Code, title vested only on the date of the sale certificate, the Courts had held that even from the date of sale the purchaser acquired an equitable interest in the property to be perfected on confirmation,⁴ and, in effect, the same position was reached as is now embodied in the Section in clear terms. Again, under the old Code the property vested in the purchaser only against parties to the suit and persons claiming under them.⁵ The omission from the present Section of the words "so far as regards the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them" does not, however, alter the law under the present Section.

9. Right to possession, when accretes.—As has been seen in Note 8 above, the right of the auction-purchaser to the property arises on confirmation of the sale.¹ It is therefore no longer necessary to obtain a sale certificate before applying for possession² as was held to be necessary under the Code of 1859.³

1. Legislative changes. — The main changes that have been introduced in this Section are as follows —

1. For the words "no suit shall be maintained against the certified purchaser" in Section 317 of the old Code, the words "No suit shall be maintained against any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court in such manner as may be prescribed" have been substituted. See Notes 16 and 17 below.
2. For the words "any other person" and "such other person" in the old Code, the words "the plaintiff" have been substituted.
3. The words "or interfere with the right of a third person . . . real owner" in sub-section (2) have been newly added. See Note 11 below.

2. Scope, object and applicability of the Section. — This Section enacts an exception to the general rule applicable to benami transactions, i.e., transactions by one person in the name of another. A benami transaction is not per se illegal¹ and, unless brought about for a fraudulent purpose and the fraud is carried out, a Court of Equity will give effect to the real title as against the benami title.² This is the general rule. The Legislature has, by this Section, declared that this general rule shall not apply to execution sales held by the Court.^{2a} The object is to put an end to purchases in court auction by one person in the name of another³ and to protect third parties.

who might deal with the purchaser against the claims of an undeclared or secret owner who puts forward the certified purchaser as the legal owner.⁴ The effect of the Section would appear to help the certified purchaser in his fraud or breach of trust against the real purchaser, but really the Section is designed to prevent fraud against third parties resulting from the collusive action of the real and certified purchasers.⁵ Hence, the Section should be applied in all cases without any regard to the consequences.⁶ But inasmuch as it is restrictive of the Court's equitable jurisdiction to grant relief to the real owner as against the ostensible owner, it should not be extended beyond its actual terms but should be construed strictly.⁷

In order that the Section may apply, the following essentials are necessary —

- (1) There should be a court sale. In other words, the Section applies only to execution sales. Thus, a sale by a receiver is not within the Section.⁸
- (2) The sale must be a real and not a fictitious one. Thus, where a collusive suit is brought in which a collusive decree is allowed to be passed and a fictitious sale held in execution of such decree, this Section has no application.⁹
- (3) The suit must be against the certified purchaser or his representative, on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or his predecessor-in-interest.¹⁰

('23) AIR 1923 Cal 302 (303). (Certified purchaser or his successor not party to the suit.)

The test to see whether a suit is based on the ground that the auction-purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff is whether the plaintiff can get any relief or any material relief without proving that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff.^{10a} The Section, like the Limitation Act, does not extinguish the rights of the real owner but only prevents him from enforcing them in a Court of law.¹¹ See Note 15 below. Sub-section (2) excepts the classes of cases mentioned therein from the operation of sub-section (1). The rule in sub-section (1) therefore does not apply —

(1) to a suit for a declaration that the name of the certified purchaser was inserted in the certificate fraudulently or without the consent of the real purchaser,¹²

(2) to the right of a third person to proceed against the property on the ground that it is liable to satisfy his claim against the real owner.

3. English law. — Under the English law, as in the Indian law, where A purchases with his own funds property in the name of B, there will, in the absence of any other circumstances, be a resulting trust in favour of A which the Courts will enforce against B.¹ But no such trust will result if the policy of any Act of Parliament would thereby be defeated.² Thus, under the old Registry Acts, where A purchased a ship in the name of B, the register was conclusive evidence of the ownership of B both at law and equity.³

4. Retrospective operation of the Section. — There is a conflict of opinion as to whether this Section is retrospective in its operation. The conflict arises in view of the fact that under Section 317 of the old Code an action against the representative of the certified purchaser was not barred but that, under the present Section, it is barred. If a court sale is held and confirmed before this Code came into force, but a suit is brought against the representative of the certified purchaser after the Code came into force, is the suit barred under Section 66? The Calcutta High Court has held that it is not,¹ on the ground that the real owner had, on the date of the confirmation of the sale, acquired a vested right to have his title declared in respect of the properties, which he could enforce against the benamidar's transferee, and that such right is not taken away by Section 66. The Lahore High Court has followed the Calcutta view.^{1a} The Allahabad² and the Madras³ High Courts have taken a contrary view, on the ground that this Section embodies, as Section 317 of the old Code did, merely a rule of procedure and that rules of procedure are always retrospective. The view of the Calcutta High Court that Section 66 or the corresponding Section 317 of the Code of 1882 embodies anything more than a rule of procedure does not seem to be a sound one.

Where a sale was held before, but confirmed after the Code came into force, the purchaser's title becomes perfected only after the confirmation and consequently Section 66 applies.⁴

5. Revenue sales. — As has been seen in Note 2 above, this Section applies only to execution sales under the Code.¹ It has no application to revenue sales.² By virtue of Section 19 (2) of the Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act I of 1895), however, the provisions of this Section apply to the case of a purchaser at a sale in enforcement and execution of a certificate issued under that Act.³

6. Cases under the Public Demands Recovery Act. — See Note 5 above.

7. "No suit shall be maintained." — The words "no suit shall be maintained" in the Section mean "no suit shall be instituted and if it is instituted, it shall fail."¹ The words "no suit" show that not even a suit for the return of the purchase money from the benamidar will lie.²

8. Plea in defence, if can be raised. — The Section bars only a suit against the certified purchaser or his representatives-in-interest. Where a suit is brought by the certified purchaser or his representatives against the real owner, the latter can plead that the purchase was only benami for him. The Section does not bar a plea of benami in defence.¹ In Mussumat Bahuns Kowur v. Lalla Buhoree Lall,² which was a case under Section 260 of the Code of 1859 corresponding to the present Section, their Lordships of the Privy Council said as follows:

"It is well known that benami purchases are common in India, and that effect is given to them by the Courts according to the real intention of the parties. The Legislature has not, by any general measure, declared such transactions to be illegal; and therefore they must still be recognised and effect given to them by the Courts except so far as positive enactment stands in the way and directs a contrary course. . . . The only express enactment on the subject occurs in Section 260. . . . This enactment is clear and definite. . . . It is confined to a suit brought against the certified purchaser. . . . The present suit which is converse of that pointed at in the Section is not within the words or scope of it. It would be specially unsafe so to construe the Act as by inference to import into it prohibitory enactments which would exclude any inquiry into the truth in any suit between the parties."

9. Suits outside the Section. — As has been seen in Note 2 above, a suit which is not against the certified purchaser or his representatives, or which is not based on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff, is not within the Section. A suit by a certified purchaser for declaration of his own title to the property purchased is not barred by the Section.¹ For suits based on grounds other than that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff, see Notes 12, 13, 14 and 15 below.

10. Suit by beneficial owner in possession or his successor in title for declaration of title. — Where the beneficial owner is in possession and brings a suit against the benamidar for declaration of his title, is the suit barred by Section 66? The general consensus of opinion is that it is barred.¹ The reason is that the words "no suit shall be maintained" in the Section are very general and do not exclude a suit for a declaration of title on the mere ground that the plaintiff is in possession.² A contrary opinion was, however, expressed by the Calcutta High Court in the undermentioned case.³ Their Lordships seem to have proceeded in that case on the view that the suit was not based on the ground that the purchase was made benami, but on the ground of existing possession in the plaintiff. The case has been dissented from by the same High Court in later cases.⁴ The view expressed in I. L. R. 23 Calcutta 699, if accepted, would amount practically to a repeal of the whole Section, and cannot, therefore, be accepted as a sound one.⁵ The Lower Burma Chief Court⁶ has, however, followed the decision in I. L. R. 23 Calcutta 699.

But an auction-purchaser may, by his conduct, be estopped from pleading the bar under Section 66.⁷ Thus, where the real owner sells the property to a third person with the consent and attestation of the benamidar auction-purchaser and the third person brings a suit against the benamidar, the latter will be estopped from pleading that the suit is barred under Section 66.⁸

Where the true owner has perfected his title by adverse possession for twelve years, a suit by him against the certified purchaser for declaration of his title will not be barred as it is based on title by adverse possession⁹ and not on the ground that the purchase was made on his behalf. See Note 12 below.

11. Suits by third person.—Under Section 317 of the old Code, no suit was maintainable against the certified purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made “on behalf of any other person or on behalf of some one through whom such other person claims.” This raised a conflict of opinion as to whether a third person, such as a creditor of the real owner, could sue to enforce his claims against the property purchased on the ground that the purchase was benami for the real owner. The Calcutta High Court held that he could, and that the bar under the Section operated only on suits brought by the beneficial owner as plaintiff.¹ The Madras High Court held a contrary view in the undermentioned case,² but in a later case³ dissented from the earlier case and came to the same conclusion as that of the Calcutta High Court. The Allahabad High Court and the Oudh Judicial Commissioner’s Court took a view contrary to that of the Calcutta High Court.⁴

The substitution, in the present Section, of the words "on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims" and the introduction of the words "or interfere with the right of a third person to proceed against that property, on the ground that it is liable to satisfy a claim of such third person against the real owner" in sub-section (2) gives effect to the Calcutta decisions and removes the conflict mentioned above.⁵

12. Suit on grounds other than those mentioned in the Section. — A suit is barred under the Section only if it is based on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims. The Section has no application if the relief is sought on certain facts which establish certain other kinds of legal relations between the parties which entitle the plaintiff to rely on them as involving and creating effectual legal claims in his favour.¹ In Ganga Sahai v. Keshri,² their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows :

"In their Lordships' opinion the provisions of that Section (Section 317 of the old Code) were designed to create some check on the practice of making what are called benami purchases at execution sales for the benefit of judgment-debtors, and in no way affect the title of persons otherwise beneficially interested in the purchase."

Illustrations

1. A sues and obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree B's house is sold in court auction and is purchased by C, the paid agent of A, with A's money, but without his knowledge. A then sues C for possession, on the ground that the purchase by the agent enures to the benefit of the principal. The suit is not barred as it is based on a legal relationship of principal and agent, and not merely on the ground that C was a benamidar.³

2. A and B are joint mortgage decree-holders against C. A applies on behalf of himself and B under Section 231 of the old Code (O. 21 R. 15) to execute the decree and purchases C's property in the court sale in his own name, the purchase money being set off against the whole decree amount. B then sues A for recovery of his share of the properties purchased by A. The suit is not barred, as B is beneficially interested in the purchase otherwise than merely on the ground that the purchase was made on B's behalf.⁴

3. In execution of A's decree against B, C purchases certain properties in court auction and then agrees with A to convey the property to him. A brings a suit for specific performance of the contract against C. The suit is not barred as the claim is based on an agreement and not on the ground that the purchase was made on A's behalf.⁵

4. A purchases certain properties in court auction with his own funds, but in the name of B. A continues in possession of the properties purchased for over twelve years. He then sues B for a declaration that he is entitled to the properties. The suit is not barred as it is based not merely on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of A but on the ground of his having perfected his title to the property by adverse possession.⁶

13. Suits by joint purchasers. — It has been seen in the Illustration 2 to Note 12 above that where one of several joint decree-holders applies for execution of the decree on behalf of all and purchases the property, the purchase money being set off against the entire decree amount, the other decree-holders are entitled to sue the purchaser for recovery of their share in the property and that Section 66 is no bar thereto.¹ Where, without being decree-holders, two persons enter into a joint venture to buy a property at a court sale, the funds being provided jointly, but the sale certificate is issued in the name of one of them only, there is a conflict of decisions as to whether a suit by the other claiming half the property on the ground that the purchase was made for both is barred under Section 66. The general trend of decisions is to the effect that such a suit is barred.² This view proceeds on the basis that the Section applies to all cases where the suit is based on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff, whether the allegation is that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff exclusively or that it was made on behalf of the plaintiff and the certified purchaser jointly. But the contrary view was taken in the undermentioned case³ by the Bombay High Court. The reason given is that the Section applies only to benami purchases at execution sales and that in such a case, there is only a joint purchase and not a benami purchase. It was also held that in such cases there is a partnership and the plaintiff must be deemed as suing to enforce his right as a partner.

Where, out of two joint mortgagees one alone sues making the other a pro forma defendant and obtains a decree, in execution of which he purchases the property in his own name, a suit by the other joint mortgagee claiming a share of the property purchased does not fall within the principle of the decision in Ganga Sahai v. Keshri,⁴ and is barred by Section 66.⁵

Where A and B both applied to purchase a property at an auction-sale in a certain proportion, agreeing to pay the price in that proportion and actually paid the 25 per cent. of the purchase money in that proportion, but the balance was wholly paid by B and he obtained the sale certificate in his name, it was held that the payment by B was on behalf of A also, that B's name in sale certificate was inserted without A's consent and that a suit by A for his share of the property purchased was not barred under Section 66 sub-section (2).⁶

14. Purchase by Hindu coparcener.— Under the Hindu law, every acquisition made by a Hindu coparcener, with joint family funds, becomes the common property of the family, in which the other members are entitled to share. Such acquisitions are not benami transactions, which are the result of private agreements or undertakings. The rights of coparceners to treat such acquisition as the common property of the family arise from the operation of law. A suit, therefore, by one coparcener to share in the property purchased by another at a court sale with joint family funds is not barred by Section 66, as it is based on a ground other than the one mentioned in the Section, namely, that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff.¹

Where the managing member of a Hindu family makes a purchase with joint family funds but takes the sale in the name of a third person, there is a conflict of opinion as to whether any member of the family can sue the third person on the ground that the purchase was benami for the managing member and so enures for the benefit of the family. The Madras High Court has held that he can.² The reason is that a purchase by a managing member in the name of a third person cannot be considered to have been made on behalf of all the members of the family and so cannot be considered to have been made "on behalf of the plaintiff" within the meaning of the Section.³ The Allahabad High Court has held to the contrary basing its decision on the ground that a purchase by a managing member is made on behalf of all the members of the family and so is made on behalf of the plaintiff.⁴ It purported to follow the decision of the Privy Council in *Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal*⁵ which was, however, a case under Section 317 of the old Code which barred a suit on the ground that the purchase was made "on behalf of any other person." It is submitted that the view of the Allahabad High Court is not correct. The object of Section 66 is, as has already been seen, to put a stop to benami purchases at court sales,⁶ and when a managing member makes such a purchase in the name of a third person, he is doing something which is wholly wrong and cannot be presumed to be acting on behalf of the family.⁷

15. Suit for specific performance of agreement to sell.— Where before the date of a court-sale A and B agree that B should buy the property in his name with funds supplied by A and should convey the property to A thereafter, the agreement is really to buy the property on behalf of A and a suit by A for specific performance of such an agreement will be one based on the ground that the property was purchased "on behalf of A" and is consequently barred by Section 66.¹

Where, before the court sale, B intends to buy the property for himself with his own funds but agrees to convey the same to A for consideration, the purchase by B is not a benami transaction at all and a suit by A for specific performance of the contract is one not based on the ground that the purchase was "on behalf of the plaintiff" and is outside Section 66.² If, however, the circumstances show that, notwithstanding the purchase was made with his own funds, B never intended to buy on his own behalf but intended to do so only on behalf of A, the case clearly falls within the mischief of Section 66.³

Where B agrees with A subsequent to the purchase (whether made on his own behalf or on behalf of A) to sell the property purchased, and A sues B for specific performance of that agreement, the suit is not barred by the Section.⁴ The reason is that the suit is based, not on the ground that the purchase was made "on behalf of the plaintiff," but on agreement which is not only not inconsistent with B's own title, but is rather the reverse.⁵

16. Suit against certified purchaser and persons claiming through him is barred. — Under Section 317 of the old Code a suit was barred only as against a certified purchaser but not as against any one claiming title under him. This was the view held by all the High Courts¹ except the Bombay High Court. That Court held that the words "certified purchaser" included his representatives also.² The substitution of the words "against any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court in such manner as may be prescribed" in the present Section for the words "against a certified purchaser" in Section 317 of the old Code has now set the conflict at rest and has given legislative effect to the Bombay view.³ Where the defendant is neither the certified purchaser nor his successor-in-title, but a third person, the Section of course has no application.⁴ Where the real purchaser sues the certified purchaser and a third person on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff; and the certified purchaser either is ex parte or admits plaintiff's title or does not contest the plaintiff's claim or executes a release deed in plaintiff's favour or is otherwise liable to him under a contract made after the sale which he duly admits, the Section does not bar it.⁵ The Section does not also apply to cases of contest between two persons each claiming to be the real purchaser under an admittedly benami court-auction-purchase.⁶

17. "Certified purchaser," meaning of. — In a case under Section 260 of the old Code of 1859 it was held by the Calcutta High Court that that Section applied to a suit against a purchaser at a court sale though the sale certificate was obtained by him only during the pendency of the suit.¹ A person entitled to get a sale certificate was considered as a certified purchaser as soon as his bid at the sale was accepted.² The Allahabad High Court, on the other hand, held in a similar case that until the certificate was actually granted he was not a certified purchaser but that as soon as the certificate was granted, he became a certified purchaser and the bar under the Section would become applicable.³

A sale certificate in the name of A "as mother and guardian of her infant son B" is a sale in favour of B who is therefore the certified purchaser.⁴

18. Waiver of right by auction-purchaser. — A purchases property at a court sale in the name of B. B obtains possession from the Court and delivers it to A and subsequently disturbs his possession. A sues B for a declaration of his title or for possession of the property. The suit is barred by Section 66. The reason is that a mere permission to hold possession cannot give or transfer a title from the benamidar to the real owner so as to enable him to maintain a suit on title against the benamidar.¹ After the Transfer of Property Act, no waiver or transfer of rights can be recognized in the case of immovable property in the absence of a registered instrument.²

Where, however, the real owner is in possession and the certified purchaser sues him for possession, the real owner can defend his possession on the basis of the real title resting with him.³

19. Name inserted in the certificate fraudulently or without the consent of the real purchaser.—Sub-section (2) is an exception to the rule in sub-section (1). A certified purchaser is not protected if he is guilty of fraud or gets his name inserted in the sale certificate without the consent of the real purchaser.¹ The basis of this exception is that the real purchaser is really an innocent person and it is not the policy of the law to benefit a fraudulent certified purchaser as against an innocent party. Where the pleader of a party, by means of treachery and fraud, purchases at an inadequate price the property of the party in a court sale, Section 66 will not operate as a bar to a suit against him for the recovery of the property on the ground that he must be taken to have made the purchase as trustee of the plaintiff.²

20. Objection as to bar by Section 66, when can be raised.—A plea that a suit is barred by the provisions of Section 66 may be put forward and given effect to at any stage of the suit, even in appeal for the first time.¹

1. Sub-section (2). — Sub-section (2) was inserted in the Section by the Code of Civil Procedure Amendment Act (I of 1914). There was an analogous provision contained in the corresponding Section (Section 327) of the former Code, and as the present Code originally omitted this provision it was held that the special rules which had been issued under the former Code were indirectly repealed from the date of the new Civil Procedure Code.¹ Even after the insertion of sub-section (2) by Act I of 1914, if no notification is issued under it, the special rules framed under Section 327 of the former Code do not apply.² But where rules are made after due notification under the sub-section, they are binding and a sale not in conformity with them is void.³

The words "with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council" were omitted by the Devolution Act (XXXVIII of 1920), Section 2 and Schedule I, Part I.

1. Object of the Section. — In Huro Prasad v. Kali Prasad, I. L. R. 9 Calcutta 290 (F. B.), Field, J., observed as follows:

"In different parts of India, the effect of sales in execution of decrees was to transfer landed estates from the old families to modern speculators. A strong opinion was entertained by certain members of the Government of India that these results of the administration of civil justice were impolitic and inexpedient; and it was suggested that some procedure might be devised by which the chief executive officer of the district would be enabled to liquidate debts of the encumbered landholders without the immediate sale of their estates, and so to preserve the old landed gentry of the country. The provisions of Sections 320 to 325C¹ were inserted in the Code of Civil Procedure, in order to give effect to these suggestions." ^{1a}

The words "with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council" have been omitted by the Devolution Act (XXXVIII of 1920), Section 2 and Schedule I, Part I.

2. "Has ordered any immoveable property to be sold." — The Section contemplates cases in which immovable property has been ordered to be sold. Hence a simple money decree in execution of which the Court has not ordered any immovable property to be sold cannot be transferred to the Collector for execution under this Section.¹ For a similar reason, the Section does not apply to land which is not capable of being sold in execution, e. g., land the sale of which in execution of a decree is prohibited under the law. Hence a decree cannot be transferred to the Collector for realising the decretal amount from such land even otherwise than by the sale of the land.²

3. Notifications under the Section. — Sections 68 to 71 have no application to the Punjab as no notification by the Provincial Government has been issued as contemplated by Section 68.¹

The Government of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh have issued a Notification No. 576-1A-93, dated 26th March 1932, declaring that with effect from the 1st April 1932, the execution of decrees in cases in which the Civil Court has ordered any agricultural land situated in those provinces or any interest in such land to be sold, shall be transferred to the Collector. See the undermentioned decisions² relating to the above notification.

Sections 68 to 72 have been excluded from operation in the following cases —

- (1) Suits and proceedings under the Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926): see Section 264 and Schedule II.
- (2) Suits for recovery of rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) as amended by Act IV of 1928, Section 148, and, under the Orissa Tenancy Act (II of 1913): see Section 198.
- (3) Suits, appeals and other proceedings under the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908): see Section 192.

4. Retrospective effect of notifications. — Alterations merely in the form of procedure are, as has been seen in Note 3 to Preamble, retrospective in effect. Hence, rules made by the Provincial Government in pursuance of a notification under Section 68 for regulating the procedure of the Collector affect sales ordered before the coming into force of such rules as well as those ordered after, unless there be some strong reason to the contrary.¹ On the wording of the particular notification in the undermentioned case,² it was held by the Allahabad High Court that the notification did not apply to orders for sale passed before the date of the notification. Where agricultural land belonging to a judgment-debtor has been sold by a Civil Court in execution of a decree, and before the confirmation of the sale a notification under this Section is issued by the Provincial Government directing execution proceedings in such cases to be transferred to the Collector, the notification does not affect the validity of the sale held by the Civil Court.³

See also Section 70 Note 6 foot-note (1).

5. Execution shall be transferred to the Collector. — Where a notification under the Section affects only a portion of the immovable property ordered to be sold, the decree should be transferred to the Collector for execution as regards such portion of the land only.¹ Where a judgment-debtor stands by and allows a Court to sell certain land as not being covered by the Government notification under the Section, he cannot subsequently sue to set aside the sale on the ground that the land was covered by the notification and that therefore the Court had no power to sell the land.²

1. Extent of power of Provincial Government to make rules. — A rule made by the Provincial Government under this Section providing that no suit shall lie to set aside a sale confirmed by the revenue authority is not ultra vires. Clause (b) of sub-section (1) of this Section authorises such a rule being made.¹ Under the former Code it was held that the power to prescribe rules for regulating the procedure of the Collector included a power to make rules providing for an appeal from his orders.²

Under Sections 35 and 37 of Madras Regulation V of 1804 the Local Government has power to make rules in regard to claims which have not merged into decrees and to extend to such claims the procedure laid down in Section 322 (a), (b) and (d) (Schedule III, Paras. 3, 4 and 6 of the present Code).³

For rules providing for appeals in the Punjab from the orders of the Collector or the gazetted subordinate of the Collector in certain cases, see Punjab Gazette, 1909, Part I, page 12.

In matters arising in execution, but not covered by the provisions of the Third Schedule or the rules framed under this Section, the Civil Court will continue to have jurisdiction.⁷

The Collector ceases to have jurisdiction to sell or confirm the sale when the Court passing the decree recalls, under the rules governing the matter, the proceedings.⁸

For jurisdiction of Collector and Civil Court in respect of partition of an undivided estate assessed to Government revenue or for separate possession of a share of such estate, see Section 54 Notes 5 and 7.

3. Ancestral property. — As an example of the working of this Section may be taken the Allahabad Government Notifications requiring that decrees for the sale of "ancestral" property must be transferred to the Collector for execution. In such cases the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to sell the property.¹ But the decision of the Court as to property being non-ancestral is final and cannot be attacked subsequent to the sale.²

As to what is and what is not ancestral property, see the undermentioned case.³

4. Suit to set aside orders of Collector. — A suit to set aside the order of the Collector is maintainable under two circumstances —

(1) Where the order of the Collector is such that if it had been passed by the Court a suit would have been maintainable to set it aside,¹ except where the order is declared to be final or conclusive by the rules framed by the Provincial Government.^{1a}

Thus, it was held under the former Code that the last clause of Section 312 (O. 21 R. 92) did not preclude a suit to confirm a sale and set aside the order passed adjustment of the decree.^{2a}

Under the former Code the expression used was "shall be deemed to be acting judicially within the meaning of Act No. XVIII of 1850." The italicised words have been omitted in the present Section, presumably to negative the view³ that, except for the purposes of Act XVIII of 1850, the Collector's functions in execution proceedings were of a ministerial and not of a judicial character.

As to applicability of the Section, see Section 68 Note 3.

72. [S. 326.] (1) Where in any local area in which no declaration under Section 68 is in force the property attached consists of land or of a share in land, and the Collector represents to the Court that the public sale of the land or share is objectionable and that satisfaction of the decree may be made within a reasonable period by a temporary alienation of the land or share, the Court may authorize the Collector to provide for such satisfaction in the manner recommended by him instead of proceeding to a sale of the land or share.

(2) In every such case the provisions of sections 69 to 71 and of any rules made in pursuance thereof shall apply so far as they are applicable.

1. Legislative changes. — The corresponding provision in the Code of 1859 (Section 244) required that security for the amount of the decree must be given before the Section could be applied. This condition was deleted in the Code of 1877. The second sub-section was inserted in the Section in the Code of 1882. The only change of any importance made by the present Section is that it has omitted the expression "or management" which occurred after the words "temporary alienation." As to the applicability of the Section, see Section 68 Note 3.

2. "And the Collector represents to the Court." — This Section does not authorize the Collector to effect a temporary alienation of the judgment-debtor's property on his own responsibility. The Collector can only make a representation to the Court which should then decide upon the matter after hearing the parties.¹ The Collector's proposal must provide for satisfaction of the decree within a reasonable period, otherwise the Court cannot act on his proposal.² His proposal for temporary alienation need not contain an express representation that the public sale of the land is objectionable. The very fact of his making the proposal for temporary alienation may be taken to show his opinion that the sale of the land is objectionable.³

As to the power of the Court to order the temporary alienation of property in cases not covered by this Section, see Note 4 to Section 51, ante.

3. "Collector," meaning of. — The term "Collector," not being defined anywhere in the Civil Procedure Code, is to be taken in the sense of the definition in General Clauses Act, Section 3 (10), viz., as meaning the Chief Officer in charge of the revenue administration of a district.¹

4. Reference to the Collector by the Civil Courts. — Though this Section empowers the Court to sanction a temporary alienation on the representation of the Collector, the Court can refer the case to the Collector and enquire if he wishes to intervene.¹ If the Collector reports his inability to do so, the Court should go on with the execution application in accordance with law and cannot decline to proceed further with it.²

As to the Court's power to act without any representation from the Collector, see Note 4 to Section 51, ante.

5. Discretion of Court. — The Court is not bound to accept the Collector's proposal and, if after hearing the decree-holder's objections and the evidence that might be offered in support of them the Court is not fully satisfied that the proposal is feasible, it ought, in the exercise of its discretion, to refuse its sanction.¹ The Court

As to Court's power to sanction temporary alienation in absence of Collector's representation, see Note 4 to Section 51, supra.

6. Court may authorise only temporary alienation. — This Section permits only a temporary alienation of the judgment-debtor's land and does not empower the Court to allow payment of the decree amount by instalments.¹

As to form of authorisation, see Schedule I, Appendix E, Form No. 42.

7. Temporary alienation of land, of which sale in execution is prohibited. — See Section 51 Note 4, ante.

8. Collector to provide for such satisfaction in the manner recommended. — The Collector is not required to submit a detailed scheme to the Court when he makes a representation under this Section and the Court may give him an authority in general terms.¹

9. Provisions of Sections 69 to 71 shall apply. — By virtue of this provision, Para 2 of Schedule III applies to Section 72 and the Court cannot therefore direct a temporary alienation of property of which the decree orders the sale in pursuance of a contract specifically affecting it.¹ Similarly, under Para 2 of Schedule III, the judgment-debtor cannot grant a usufructuary mortgage of property which is under the Collector's management under this Section.² Under the same Paragraph the period during which the property is under the Collector's control under the present Section must be excluded in computing the limitation for execution against the property.³ So also, Section 71 must be read with this Section, and as Section 71 provides that the Collector must be deemed to be acting judicially, all objections relating to execution proceedings before the Collector under Section 72 must be disposed of by him.⁴

10. Appeal. — There is no right of appeal against the Collector's order making a representation or refusing to make a representation to the Court under the present Section.¹ But the order of the Court authorising the Collector to make temporary alienation is appealable.²

11. Revision. — Where a Court, without exercising its own judgment, merely accepts, as a matter of course, the Collector's recommendation, the order of the Court can be set aside in revision.¹

DISTRIBUTION OF ASSETS

73. [S. 295.] (1) Where assets⁴ are held by a Court⁴ and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets,¹¹ made application to the Court⁸ for the execution of decrees for the payment of money⁶ passed against the same judgment-debtor⁷ and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of realization,¹⁹ shall¹² be rateably distributed²² among all such persons:

Proceeds of execution sale to be rateably distributed among decree-holders.

Provided as follows:—

- (a) where any property is sold subject to a mortgage or charge,¹⁵ the mortgagee or incumbrancer shall not be entitled to share in any surplus arising from such sale;
- (b) where any property liable to be sold in execution of a decree is subject to a mortgage or charge, the Court may, with the consent of the mortgagee or incumbrancer, order that the property be sold free from the mortgage or charge,¹⁶ giving to the mortgagee or incumbrancer the same interest in the proceeds of the sale as he had in the property sold;
- (c) where any immoveable property is sold in execution of a decree ordering its sale for the discharge of an incumbrance¹⁷ thereon, the proceeds of sale shall be applied —
 - first, in defraying the expenses of the sale;
 - secondly, in discharging the amount due under the decree;
 - thirdly, in discharging the interest and principal monies due on subsequent incumbrances (if any); and
 - fourthly, rateably among the holders of decrees for the payment of money against the judgment-debtor, who have, prior to the sale of the property, applied to the Court which passed the decree ordering such sale for execution of such decrees, and have not obtained satisfaction thereof.

(2) Where all or any of the assets liable to be rateably distributed under this section are paid to a person not entitled to

73 receive the same, any person so entitled may sue such person to compel him to refund the assets.¹⁸

(3) Nothing in this section affects any right of the Crown.¹⁹

The rule enunciated in this Section is only a rule of procedure and provides a cheap and speedy mode of execution of several decrees obtained against the same judgment-debtor by rateably distributing the assets held by a Court amongst the several rival decree-holders. It does not, however, alter or limit the substantive rights of such rival decree-holders.⁵ A failure to participate in the assets under this Section does not deprive a decree-holder of the rights to execute his decree.⁶ As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Shankar Sarup v. Mejo Mal,⁷ the scheme of the Section "is rather to enable the Judge as a matter of administration to distribute the price according to what seem, at the time, to be the rights of the parties, without this distribution importing a conclusive determination on those rights which may be subsequently re-adjusted in a suit."

See also the undermentioned case.⁸

3. Essential conditions for the applicability of the Section. — In order that a decree-holder may claim a rateable distribution of the assets of the judgment-debtor under this Section, the following conditions must exist¹ —

1. The assets must be held by the Court.
2. The decrees obtained by the decree-holder and the attaching-creditor must be decrees for the payment of money.
3. Such decrees should have been obtained against the same judgment-debtor.
4. The claimant for rateable distribution must have applied for execution to the Court by which the assets are held.
5. Such application should have been made before the receipt of assets by the Court.

If the above conditions are all fulfilled, the decree-holder will be entitled to participate in the rateable distribution. It is not necessary that he should have given notice of his claim to other decree-holders.²

Before passing an order under this Section, the Court should give the parties claiming to be interested, an opportunity of being heard, and of establishing their claims to participate in the distribution.³

4. There must be assets held by the Court. — The right to rateable distribution under this Section is conditional upon there being assets held by the Court.

Hence, where the property attached is purchased by the attaching decree-holder privately, no right to rateable distribution arises as in such a case no proceeds come into the hands of the Court.¹ The word "assets" means all a man's property, of whatever kind, which may be used to satisfy debts or demands existing against him,² in other words, which may be used to satisfy his liabilities.

The five percentum of the sale price which is deposited under O. 21 R. 89 for payment to the auction-purchaser as compensation is not an asset of the judgment-debtor available for rateable distribution among his judgment-creditors. The reason is that the five percentum is not deposited in payment of any debt due by the judgment-debtor to the auction-purchaser but a statutory payment in order to ensure the setting aside of the sale.³

Where the manager of a joint Hindu family is adjudicated an insolvent, all that vests in the Official Receiver is not the interest of the other members of the family in the family property but only the right or the capacity which the insolvent had of making such interest available for the benefit of joint creditors under certain conditions which are recognised by the Hindu law. So long, therefore, as this right is not exercised by the Receiver and the interests of the other members are not sold, it is open to the latter to transfer their shares voluntarily to others and it is open also to their creditors to attach and sell them in execution of their decrees against such members. Hence, proceeds realised by the sale of such shares in execution of decrees obtained against the other members will be "assets" available for rateable distribution among persons holding money decrees against such members.⁴

The expression "assets held by the Court" conveys the idea of assets realised or converted into cash, for until then, the assets cannot be said to be held by the Court.⁵

This Section applies also to cases where the Collector, to whom execution is transferred, sells the lands of the judgment-debtor and holds the assets,⁶ as in such cases the purchase money must be deemed to be received and held by the Court as soon as it is paid to the Collector.⁷ But where the immovable property of a person is sold by the Collector in execution of an award under the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act of 1925 (which provides for the enforcement of such award according to the law applicable to the recovery of arrears of land revenue) the sale proceeds of the property in the hands of the Collector are not assets held by a Court within the meaning of this Section.⁸

In order that the assets should be capable of being distributed under Section 295 of the old Code, they had to be realised either —

1. by sale in execution of a decree, or,

2. otherwise in execution of a decree. This was interpreted in two ways —

(a) Such assets as were realised otherwise than by sale, from the property of the judgment-debtor, e. g., under O. 21 R. 69, O. 21 R. 83 and Schedule III, Paragraphs 2 and 7.⁹ Thus, monies paid by the judgment-debtor to the warrant officer arresting him in execution of a decree were held not to be distributable under Section 295 on the ground that such monies were not realised from the property of the judgment-debtor.¹⁰

(b) Such assets as were realised by any process of execution expressly provided by the Code.¹¹ This was a wider interpretation than the one in (a) above. Thus, monies paid into Court under a prohibitory order under Section 268 (O. 21 R. 46), though not realised from the property of the judgment-debtor, are still recovered under a process of execution under the Code and were therefore held to be distributable assets under Section 295.¹² See also the undermentioned cases.¹³

Monies not realised in either of these two modes, namely, by a sale in execution of a decree or "otherwise in execution of a decree" were not assets distributable under Section 295 of the old Code.¹⁴

The substitution of the words "where assets are held by a Court" in the present Section for the words "whenever assets are realised by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree" which occurred in the old Section, makes the Section very much wider than before.¹⁵ The words "assets held by a Court" will now include —

In order that Section 73 may apply, it is not therefore now necessary that the receipt of assets should have been under a process of execution, but it is still necessary that the assets should have reached the hands of the Court in execution, i. e., on the execution side.¹⁸ For example, O. 21 R. 1 provides that all monies payable under a decree shall be paid into the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree. A payment made by the judgment-debtor of the decree amount into Court is not one levied by any process in execution but is still one in execution. Such a deposit will, under the present Section, be "assets held by the Court."¹⁹ Similarly, money paid by a judgment-debtor under O. 21 R. 55 though made for the satisfaction of a particular debt, is subject to rateable distribution under this Section.²⁰ On the other hand, money paid in Court to avoid arrest before judgment under Order 38,²¹ or money paid to the decree-holder out of Court under a private arrangement,²² or money paid by

In Sorabji v. Kala Raghunath,²⁵ the Bombay High Court has however placed a very narrow construction on the words "assets held by the Court." The question there was, whether money paid into Court by a judgment-debtor under O. 21 R. 55 for payment of the amount due to the decree-holder who got the property attached was subject to rateable distribution. Scott, C. J., held that it was not, on the ground that the assets referred to in Section 73 should be assets received in the process of execution. This view has been followed by the Rangoon High Court²⁶ and by the Judicial Commissioners' Courts in Nagpur²⁷ and Sind.²⁸ In Ebji Umersey v. Graham & Co.,²⁹ which is also a case of the Bombay High Court, the question was whether money paid by the judgment-debtor under Section 55 (4) to the warrant officer arresting him, is an asset subject to rateable distribution. Macleod, J., sitting as a single Judge, held that it was not assets, on the ground that the Section was intended to apply to assets realised by the sale of the property attached.

The view of Scott, C. J., in *Sorabji v. Kala Raghunath*³⁰ has been expressly dissented from by the Madras, Calcutta and the Patna High Courts.³¹ It has also been dissented from in later cases of the Bombay High Court itself. In Nathmal v. Moniram,³² Pratt, J., while feeling himself bound as a single Judge to follow the decision of the appellate Bench in Sorabji v. Kala Raghunath,³³ disapproved of the view of Scott, C. J., expressed therein. In Indaji Majaji v. Cooverji Nowroji,³⁴ Mirza, J., though sitting as a single Judge, refused to follow the decision in Sorabji v. Kala Raghunath,³⁵ on the ground that the observations of Scott, C. J., in that case were obiter dicta. He entirely agreed with the dissentient views expressed by Pratt, J., in Nathmal v. Moniram.³⁶

It is submitted that the decisions in *Sorabji v. Kala Raghunath*³⁷ and Ebji Umersey v. Graham & Co.,³⁸ have not appreciated or given effect to the deliberate change in the language of the Section³⁰ and in view of the considered opinions to the contrary both in the same and in the other High Courts, the view expressed in those decisions and followed in Rangoon, Nagpur and Sind cannot be accepted as a sound one.

In some decisions⁴⁰ the view has been expressed that where a payment has been made for a specific purpose or specifically towards a particular decree, the money so paid is not liable for rateable distribution. It is submitted that this view is not sound in view of the wide language of the Section. In Satnarain Prasad Choudhury v. Mahabir Prasad Choudhury,⁴¹ Fazl Ali, J., observed as follows :

"Now Section 73 being imperative, it is obligatory upon a Court to distribute rateably the assets held by it (irrespective of how they came into its hands) among all the creditors who are entitled to the benefit of this Section. The assets are so distributable by the operation of law and there is nothing in this Section or any other provision of the Code to show that the Court must deal with them in accordance with the wishes of the judgment-debtor. When therefore there are several decrees outstanding against a judgment-debtor and all the requirements of Section 73 are complied with, the judgment-debtor cannot prevent rateable distribution by merely earmarking his payments for the benefit of one of the decree-holders."

In Noor Mahomed v. Bilasiram,⁴² Rankin, J., observed as follows :

"The money paid, with whatever motive, if paid to the Court, is paid upon terms of the Code whatever they may be. Those terms, as I read Section 73, have been laid down so that distinction in the form in which execution has been had, in the precise extent to which execution has been allowed to run, in the exact source or genesis of the fund in Court, are now no part of the definition of the assets that are subject to distribution rateably. The object of the new Code in using larger language can only be to avoid anomaly. To introduce a distinction on the strength of the voluntariness of the payment or the purpose of the debtor, is, I think, to cut down the language and intention of the Code upon a principle which is inapplicable to the subject-matter and which if applicable is very difficult to imply."

But, where a judgment-debtor has already assigned certain property to a particular decree-holder or created a charge on a certain property in favour of a particular decree-holder, such property is not liable to the claims of other decree-holders, for rateable distribution.⁴³ Similarly, where the assets in the Court represent security given for the satisfaction of a particular decree, the holders of other decrees are not entitled to rateable distribution out of such assets, the reason being that in such a case the decree-holder for whose benefit security has been given gets a lien on the assets for the satisfaction of his decree.⁴⁴

It has been held by the Bombay High Court⁴⁵ that where the assets held by the Court are derived from property which is not liable to be proceeded against in execution of the decree under which the claim for rateable distribution is made, the holder of such decree will not be entitled to share in such assets. But the decision of the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court cited below⁴⁶ is inconsistent with this view.

It is submitted that the above view of the Bombay High Court does not seem to be warranted by the language of the Section.

As to claims for rateable distribution in cases where a decree-holder is allowed to purchase property in execution of his own decree and to set off the purchase money against the decretal amount, see O. 21 R. 72, Note 5.

As to whether money deposited under O. 21 R. 89 for setting aside an execution sale is liable for rateable distribution, see Note 23 to O. 21 R. 89, infra.

5. What are assets. — See Note 4 above.

6. Claimant for rateable distribution and attaching decree-holder must be holders of decrees for the payment of money. — As already noticed in Note 3 above, it is one of the essential conditions for the applicability of the Section that the claimants for rateable distribution and the attaching decree-holder must be holders of decrees for the payment of money. Thus, persons in whose favour orders for the payment of money are passed are not entitled to the benefit of this Section.¹ The reason is that the definition of decree does not include an order.

As a general rule, every decree by virtue of which money is payable is to that extent a "decree for money."² Thus, a decree for the payment of mesne profits is a "decree for the payment of money" within the meaning of the Section. It is not necessary that the amount of mesne profits should have been ascertained; it is enough if the decree-holder has applied under O. 21 R. 42.³ The reason is that O. 21 R. 42 referred to above treats the attachment as a proceeding in execution of the decree and the application for attachment may, therefore, be treated as one for execution. Similarly, a judgment entered up under Section 86 of the Insolvent Debtor's Act is a "decree for the payment of money."⁴

There has, however, been a conflict of opinion as to whether a mortgage decree is a "decree for the payment of money" and whether such a decree-holder can claim rateable distribution under this Section.

In Hart v. Taraprasanna,⁵ it was held by the Calcutta High Court in accordance with the general rule stated above that a holder of a mortgage decree or of any decree under which money was payable and other relief granted, was the holder of a "decree for the payment of money" within the meaning of the Section. In Vaidhianadaswamy v. Somasundaram,⁶ a Full Bench of the Madras High Court held that a mortgage decree is one for the payment of money whether there is a direction to pay personally or not.⁷ This view was also adopted by the Punjab Chief Court in the undermentioned case.⁸ The Full Bench view has been distinguished in a later case⁹ wherein it was held that where a mortgage decree expressly exempts the defendants from personal liability, it is not a money decree under the Section. The Allahabad

High Court¹⁰ and later decisions of the Calcutta High Court¹¹ distinguishing Hart v. Taraprasanna,⁵ have held that a mortgage decree is not a decree for the payment of money even though it provides for the deficiency of the decree amount being realised, after sale of the hypotheca, personally from the mortgagor. The Lahore High Court also has in its recent decisions taken a similar view.¹²

It is submitted that the Madras view is not sound. The provisions of O. 21 R. 20 clearly show that the Legislature intended to make a distinction between a "mortgage decree" and "a decree for the payment of money."

A composite mortgage decree for sale including a personal decree for the balance is a decree for the payment of money within the meaning of this Section and the holder of such a composite decree is entitled to rateable distribution, when the net proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged properties fall short of the decretal amount.¹³

A personal decree obtained by a mortgagee independently of his mortgage,¹⁴ or for interest due on the mortgage,¹⁵ or for the balance due after the mortgaged property is sold¹⁶ and found insufficient to satisfy the mortgage debt, are all decrees for the payment of money. Again, a decree for money personally against B and against the properties of C and D does not thereby lose its character as a money decree against B for the purpose of claiming rateable distribution of the assets of B held by the Court.¹⁷

A mortgagee may also waive his lien on the mortgaged property and content himself with a mere money decree. In such a case he will, as a money decree-holder, be entitled to claim rateable distribution.¹⁸

7. Such decrees should have been obtained against the same judgment-debtor. — The third condition for the applicability of the Section is that the decree should have been obtained against the same judgment-debtor.¹ Where X obtains a decree against A, and Y obtains a decree against B, the decrees are not against the same judgment-debtor even if A himself is a judgment-creditor of B.²

But it is not necessary that all the judgment-debtors in each of the several decrees should be identically the same.³ It is sufficient if there is one judgment-debtor common to all the decrees.⁴ Thus, where X gets a decree against A; Y a decree against A and B, and Z a decree against A, B and C, the decrees are all "against the same judgment-debtor" with respect to the assets of A held by the Court.⁵ But if, in the illustration mentioned above, assets are realised from C or his property, X and Y are not entitled to claim rateable distribution.⁶

There will be a difference, however, in the extent of the share of the assets in which each of the decree-holders can claim rateable distribution according as the properties of the one common judgment-debtor or of such debtor and of others, are sold in execution. Thus, in the illustration mentioned above, if A's property is attached and sold, X, Y and Z will share rateably in the whole of the proceeds. If the properties of A and B are sold, X will share in the assets so far as it represents the share of A in the property. Y and Z will share in the whole of the proceeds. If the properties of A, B and C are sold, X will share in the assets representing the share of A in the property, Y will share in the assets which represent the shares of A and B in the property and Z will share in the whole proceeds.⁷

From the above, it is clear that where X obtains a decree against A, and Y obtains a decree against A and B and the properties of both A and B are sold in execution of Y's decree, X will only be entitled to a rateable distribution of the sale proceeds of A's share in the properties, A alone being the common judgment-debtor under both the decrees. But, where A and B constitute a joint Hindu family of which A is the manager and X obtains a decree against A as manager of the joint family and Y obtains a decree against both A and B eo nomine as members of the joint family, both A and B would be judgment-debtors under both the decrees and X will be entitled to a rateable distribution of the proceeds obtained by the sale of the entire family properties and not only to a rateable share in the proceeds obtained by the sale of A's share in the properties. The reason is that where a person is sued as manager of a joint Hindu family, it must be taken that he represents all the members of the family and they are constructively parties to the suit.⁸

Suppose X obtains a decree against A, a Hindu father and Y obtains a decree against A and his sons B and C, and suppose that the entire joint family properties belonging to A, B and C are sold in execution of Y's decree. Is X entitled to claim a share in the entire proceeds? In other words, are all the judgment-debtors to be considered to be the same under both the decrees? It has been held by the Madras High Court that it must be considered that both the decrees have been passed against the same judgment-debtors.⁹ This view is founded on the ground that in such cases both the decrees are executable against the same properties, that a liberal construction should be adopted in regard to the words "same judgment-debtor" in this Section and that without unduly straining the language of the Section, decrees executable against the same properties may be treated as decrees passed against the same judgment-debtors.¹⁰

The words "same judgment-debtor" will not include a person who does not occupy the same character in all the decrees.¹¹ Thus, where X obtains a decree against A in his personal capacity and Y obtains a decree against him as heir of P, the two decrees are not against the same judgment-debtor.¹² Similarly, a decree against A in his personal capacity and a decree against a firm of which A is a partner are not decrees against the "same judgment-debtor."¹³ The Calcutta High Court has, however, in the undermentioned decisions¹⁴ taken the view that a decree obtained against a person as the heir of a deceased person and another decree obtained against him in his personal capacity are decrees against the same judgment-debtor within the meaning of the Section. Similarly, the same High Court has held in the undermentioned decision¹⁵ that a decree passed against a firm is really one against the individuals constituting the firm and hence, the judgment-debtor under a decree against a firm and under a decree against the individuals constituting the firm are the same for the purpose of this Section.

A decree is passed against A during his lifetime. Another decree is passed against A's heirs after A's death. Are the two decrees against the same judgment-debtor? On this question, there is a conflict of decisions. The High Courts of Allahabad,¹⁶ Bombay¹⁷ and Calcutta¹⁸ have held that in such cases the decrees are not against the same judgment-debtor notwithstanding the fact that both the decrees are founded on a liability of the deceased. But, the Madras High Court has, in a recent Full Bench decision,¹⁹ held that the decrees are not against the same judgment-debtor. The Madras view proceeds on the ground that it is not necessary under this Section that the several decrees must be against the same persons eo nomine and that decrees which are capable of execution against the same estate may, without unduly straining the language of the Section, be regarded as passed against the same persons.

Where A and D each obtained a decree against B, and after B's death C who was the legal representative of B purchased A's decree with monies not belonging to B's estate, C is not disentitled to claim rateable distribution, along with D, by reason only of his being the legal representative of B.²⁰

8. Claimant for rateable distribution must have applied for execution to the Court by which assets are held. — In order to claim rateable distribution, a decree-holder must have applied under O. 21 R. 11 of the Code for execution of his decree.¹ Such an application is necessary, not only for the enforcement of his right to rateable distribution but also to control similar rights of rival decree-holders.² But it is not necessary for a decree-holder to make a specific application for rateable distribution.³

The application must be in form, and in substance one for execution.⁴ A mere omission to give certain particulars or other technical defects will not invalidate an application for execution for the purposes of Section 73.⁵ Nor is it necessary that attachment should be asked for or should follow the application for execution.⁶ Where an application for execution is presented to the Court before the receipt of assets by the Court but being defective is returned and is re-presented only after the receipt of assets, the application must be deemed to have been validly made on the date on which it was originally presented, and is sufficient for the purpose of this Section.⁷

The following have been held not to be applications for execution, for the purposes of Section 73 —

- (1) An application merely for rateable distribution.⁸
- (2) An application merely for attachment of property without anything more.⁹
- (3) An application to a superior Court to transfer to itself, an execution case from an inferior Court.¹⁰
- (4) An application to a Court for an order to another Court not to sell properties.¹¹
- (5) An application for payment out of Court, by a Judge's summons.¹²

Not only is an application for execution necessary, but such application must have been made to the Court, i. e., the Court which holds the assets.¹³ Where all the decrees are of the same Court as the one which holds the assets, the application for execution must, of course, be made to that Court. But where the assets are held by Court A and the decree under which the claim for rateable distribution is being made has been passed by Court B, such claim cannot be allowed unless before the receipt of assets by Court A an application has been made to that Court for execution of the decree.¹⁴ (This is the general rule. In cases coming under Section 63, ante, an application to the Court actually holding the assets is not necessary: see below.) This necessarily involves the condition that the decree must have been transferred to Court A, for unless the decree is transferred to that Court no application can be made to it for execution of the decree. (See Section 38 ante.) But, it is not necessary that the copy of the decree must have actually reached Court A. It is enough if Court B has ordered the transfer of the decree to Court A and the decree-holder has applied to that Court for execution before the receipt of assets by it.¹⁵

Suppose now that X obtains a decree in a superior Court against A and applies for execution there. Y obtains a decree against A in an inferior Court. Then —

- (1) If Y has not applied for execution of his decree either in the superior or in the inferior Court, he will not be entitled to rateable distribution with X.¹⁶
- (2) If he gets his decree transferred to the superior Court and applies for execution there, he will of course be entitled to participate in the rateable distribution.¹⁷
- (3) If he has applied for execution to the inferior Court, he may get his execution case transferred to the superior Court. This will practically amount to his applying to the superior Court itself for execution and, consequently, he need not apply again to the superior Court, for execution.¹⁸
- (4) If he has applied for execution to the inferior Court but has neither got his execution case transferred to the superior Court nor has applied to execution through Court Z. The property is sold and the sale proceeds are held by Court Z. In such a case, it has been seen above that A will be entitled to rateable distribution of the assets although he has not applied for execution to Court Z. Is B who has neither attached the property through Court Y nor applied for execution to Court Z entitled to a rateable share of such assets? It has been held by the Nagpur High Court in the undermentioned case²⁸ that B is entitled to a rateable share. The decision proceeds on the ground that in such a case the rateable distribution takes place under Section 63 which confers upon Court Z the power to determine all claims to the attached property including claims for rateable distribution and that under that Section the word "claims" does not mean merely claims of persons who have attached the property. It is submitted that the decision cannot be supported. As already pointed out, it is not a correct view to hold that in such cases Section 63 alone applies and that a reference to the provisions of Section 73 is not necessary. Under the latter Section an application to the Court holding the assets is necessary for making a claim for rateable distribution. But in the case of decree-holders who have already attached the property (from which the assets are derived) through Courts of inferior grade, a fresh application for execution to the Court of the superior grade which holds the assets is not necessary. The reason is that in such cases, the application to the Court of the inferior grade itself is to be treated as an application to the Court holding the assets, because the Court of the superior grade must be deemed to receive and hold the assets on behalf of all the Courts through whom the property has been attached. But this principle cannot apply to persons who have not attached the property through the inferior Court.

It has been held by the Bombay High Court²⁹ that the application for execution referred to by the Section is one which on the face of it is entitled to succeed. On this ground, it has been held that if the decree is on the face of it one which could not be executed against the property represented by the money in the Court, the Court cannot allow the holder of such decree to share in the rateable distribution of the money.³⁰

For the purposes of Section 73 an ordinary Civil Court and the same Court invested with Small Cause powers are distinct Courts.³¹ But where the decree of a District Munsif passed in the exercise of his ordinary jurisdiction is transferred for execution to the Small Cause side of the Subordinate Court, the holder of the decree so transferred is entitled to claim a share in the assets realised by the Subordinate Judge's Court in execution of a Small Cause decree as if both the proceedings are in the same Court.³²

9. Effect of dismissal of the application for execution.—To entitle a decree-holder to claim rateable distribution it is essential that there should be a subsisting

decree¹ and that his application for execution should be pending and undisposed of at the time of the receipt of the assets.² If the application had been struck off or dismissed before such date, he cannot participate in the distribution.³ It has, however, been held that although there may be a formal order dismissing an application for execution, where such order is not a judicial order but only an order for administrative or statistical purposes, the application must be deemed to be pending notwithstanding such dismissal and the applicant will be entitled to rateable distribution of the assets received subsequently.⁴ But, where an execution application has been struck off as wholly infructuous, it cannot be said to be pending merely because the attachment has been ordered to continue.⁵ A dismissal of the application after the date of the receipt of assets will not affect the right to rateable distribution which had accrued to the decree-holder earlier at the time of the receipt of assets.⁶

10. Claimant attaching before judgment.—An attachment before judgment confers no right on the party who obtains the attachment,¹ the only benefit which he gets by such attachment being that, when he applies subsequently for execution, he need not re-attach the properties.² A decree-holder who has obtained an attachment before judgment of his debtor's property will not thereby become entitled to get rateable distribution under Section 73 unless, like other decree-holders, he applies for execution after getting his decree.³

11. The application should have been made before the receipt of assets by the Court.—It has been seen in Note 1 above that the words "before the receipt of assets" have in the present Section been substituted for the words "prior to the realisation" in the old Section. The change was effected with a view to make the meaning perfectly clear and to avoid the necessity of judicial interpretations such as those given to the word "realisation" under the old Code.¹

In order to claim rateable distribution, a decree-holder must have applied for execution before the receipt of assets by the Court.² It, therefore, becomes important to ascertain the exact point of time at which assets are received by the Court.

The Section only requires that there must be an application for execution before the assets are received. It does not prescribe "any period" within the meaning of Section 10 of the General Clauses Act for the making of such application. Hence that Section does not apply to such cases and when assets are received by the Court during the vacation, an application for execution presented on the re-opening day cannot be considered to be in time for the purpose of this Section.³

Assets will be deemed to be received by the Court when they are received —

1. by the Court itself, or,
2. by a receiver appointed by the Court in execution,⁴ or,
3. by the officer conducting an execution sale under O. 21 R. 65,⁵ or,
4. by the Collector holding a sale under Schedule 3 of the Code.⁶

In the first case the date of receipt is, of course, the actual date on which the money is received by the Court. In the other three cases, the date of receipt will be the date on which the several officers receive the amount and not the date on which those officers send the money to the Court.⁷

Now the several classes of cases in which assets may be received by the Court and the dates on which such assets will be deemed to have been "received" may be considered :

- (a) Where a fund belonging to the defendant is attached before judgment and the same is deposited in Court to the credit of that suit, it does not become assets until the plaintiff, after getting a decree, applies for execution and the same is ordered by the Court. The date of receipt of assets is the date of the order.⁸ If, in the above case, the fund attached is lying in Court to the credit of a suit, other than the one in which it is attached, it is further necessary that the fund should be transferred to the credit of the suit in which it is attached. The date of receipt of assets will, in such a case, be the date of the transfer.⁹

Illustration

A files a suit against B and attaches before judgment certain piecegoods belonging to him. The goods are sold by order of the Court under O. 39 R. 6 and the sale proceeds deposited into Court to the credit of A's suit. C, another creditor, files a suit against B and attaches before judgment the money in deposit in A's suit. He then obtains a decree and applies for execution. The application for execution is ordered but the fund is not transferred to the credit of C's suit. Subsequent to this A obtains a decree in his suit and applies for execution and the same is ordered. Is A entitled to rateable distribution along with C? Yes. The reason is that the fund did not become assets in C's suit, as it was not transferred to the credit of his suit, but became assets in A's suit when A's application for execution was ordered, since the fund was already lying to the credit of A's suit.¹⁰

But, it has been held by the Patna High Court that where a fund in Court to the credit of the judgment-debtor in some other matter, is attached by a decree-holder in execution of his decree, the money must be treated as "received" by the Court in execution of the decree as soon as it is so attached although there is no entry in the books transferring the money to the credit of the suit in which the decree has been passed.¹¹

- (b) Where the amount belonging to the judgment-debtor in the hands of a third person is attached by a prohibitory order under O. 21 R. 46 and the garnishee deposits the amount in Court under O. 21 R. 46 (3), the date of the receipt of assets will be the date on which the garnishee makes the deposit.¹² A decree-holder who applies for execution after the deposit, though on the same day as the deposit, will not be entitled to claim rateable distribution, as he did not apply "before the receipt of assets by the Court."¹³

- (c) Where moveable property of the judgment-debtor is sold in execution, the date of receipt of assets is the date on which the sale proceeds are received by the Court. If the property is sold in several parcels the assets will be deemed to be received on the several dates on which the sale proceeds of the several parcels are respectively paid. Thus a decree-holder who applies for execution after the sale of parcels 1 and 2, but before the sale of parcels 3 and 4, will be entitled to rateable distribution of the sale proceeds of parcels 3 and 4, but not of parcels 1 and 2.¹⁴

- (d) Where immovable property of the judgment-debtor is sold in a single lot in execution of a decree, the assets will be deemed to be received, not on the date when the deposit of 25 per cent. of the purchase money is paid under O. 21 R. 84, but on the date when the balance of the purchase money is paid. Thus, a decree-holder who applies for execution after the 25 per cent. deposit is made but before the balance is paid is entitled to come in under Section 73,¹⁵ while one who applies after the balance is paid will not be so entitled, even if his application is before the date of the confirmation of the sale.¹⁶
- (e) Where immovable property of the judgment-debtor is sold in several lots in execution of a decree, there is a conflict of opinion as to whether the assets are deemed to be received, when the entire amount of the purchase money in respect of all the parcels are paid, or whether they are deemed to be received on the several dates on which the sale proceeds of the several lots are respectively paid into Court. The Madras High Court and the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court have taken the former view.¹⁷ In the undermentioned case¹⁸ the Calcutta High Court followed the decision of the Madras High Court, but in a later case¹⁹ they have adopted the latter view. This later Calcutta case does not refer to the earlier case of the same High Court or to the decision of the Madras High Court. Nor does it give any reasons for its view. In view of the fact that the word 'assets' means, in such a case as this, the proceeds realised by one order of sale,²⁰ the later decision of the Calcutta High Court does not seem to be based on sound principle.
- (f) As to when assets are deemed to be realised in cases where permission to bid and set-off is given to a decree-holder, see Note 5 to O. 21 R. 72.
- (g) Where in pursuance of an order passed by a superior Court under Section 63 ante, assets realised in execution by an inferior Court are transferred to the superior Court, the assets are deemed to have been received within the meaning of this Section, when they are received by the superior Court and not when they are received by the inferior Court.²¹

Where the receipt of assets and the application for execution are made on the same day, there is no presumption as to the order of events and it is the duty of the distributing Court to determine the question of priority.²²

11a. "And have not obtained satisfaction thereof." — Where the decree of any of the claimants for rateable distribution has been partially satisfied, only the unsatisfied portion of the decree should be taken into account in considering the question of rateable distribution.¹ Even if the partial satisfaction of the decree takes place after the application for rateable distribution has been made, such partial satisfaction must be taken into account.² In other words, rateable distribution should be made according to the amount due to each decree-holder at the time of the distribution.³

12. Jurisdiction of Court to inquire into the validity of the decree under which rateable distribution is claimed.—A and B obtain decrees for money against C and apply for execution before the assets are received by the Court. In the proceedings for rateable distribution A contends that B's decree is collusive, fraudulent and is otherwise invalid. Can the Court go into this question? There is a preponderance of judicial opinion to the effect that the Court cannot go into the question.¹ The view is based on the ground that the Court distributing the assets is only an executing Court and as such cannot question the decree.² In Dattatraya Govindseth v. Purshottam Narayanseth,³ Macleod, C. J., observed as follows: "On general principles, the Court which would be merely a distributing agency would not have any power to deal with the question whether any of the decrees had been obtained by fraud or other improper means just as in an ordinary case of execution the Court which executes the decree cannot go behind the decree." But the question as to the validity of the decree can be gone into in a suit under sub-section 2 of the Section.⁴

Though an executing Court acting under this Section cannot question the validity of a decree under which a claim for rateable distribution is being made, yet, where on the face of it such decree is inexecutable against the property from which the assets held by the Court are derived, the Court cannot grant the claim for rateable distribution.⁵

by the subsequent adjudication of the judgment-debtor as an insolvent.¹ The reason is that from the time of the order of rateable distribution, the money must be treated as belonging, not to the judgment-debtor but to the decree-holders in whose favour the order was passed. The Official Receiver could, therefore, no more recover the money from the Court which passed the order than from the decree-holder.² As regards realisations subsequent to the vesting order, however, they will vest in the Official Receiver or Assignee and will not be available for rateable distribution.³

An application for rateable distribution presented by an insolvent (in regard to a decree passed in his favour before his adjudication) after adjudication and before his discharge is competent.⁴

15. Sale subject to mortgage — Mortgagee cannot get rateable distribution — Proviso (a). — Where a property is sold in execution of a money decree subject to a mortgage, the mortgagee is really not affected by such sale, but retains his rights to proceed against the property in enforcement of his mortgage.¹ He will not, therefore, as a mortgagee, be entitled to share in the proceeds of the sale along with other decree-holders.² If, however, he holds also a money decree, he is not barred from sharing, as a money decree-holder, in the rateable distribution.³ He can also waive his right on the mortgage and claim to participate in the assets as a money decree-holder.⁴ See Note 6 above.

A sale subject to a mortgage means a sale expressly made subject to the mortgage, i. e., by the certificate of sale.⁵

16. *been validly held by the Court.*³ Where a private alienation is made with the sanction of the executing Court, this proviso does not apply.⁴

The consent of the mortgagee is necessary for a sale under this proviso. A sale without notice to the mortgagee and without his consent will not prejudice his rights in any way.⁵ If the mortgagee consents but the fact of mortgage or the amount of mortgage money is disputed, the Court should make a summary enquiry under O. 21, R. 66 (4) and state the result of the inquiry in the proclamation of sale.⁶

An order for sale under this proviso must have specific reference as to the person from whose encumbrance it will be sold free and there must be express direction or notice to purchasers that the property is to be so sold.⁷

Where a property is sold under this proviso the auction-purchaser becomes the absolute owner thereof, the mortgagee's rights being transferred to the sale proceeds in Court.⁸ But the mortgagee cannot thereby obtain an order for payment of the amount due to him under the mortgage.⁹ He must enforce his rights by way of suit.¹⁰

The words "any property" in clauses (a) and (b) of the proviso, as distinguished from "immovable property" in clause (c), shows that a mortgage of moveables is included therein.¹¹

17. Sale in execution of decree on mortgage — Mode of applying the sale proceeds — Proviso (c). — This proviso applies only where any immovable property is sold in execution of a decree ordering its sale for the discharge of an incumbrance thereon.¹ The words "an incumbrance" mean only the incumbrance sued on and not other incumbrances.² A executes a first mortgage in favour of X, a second mortgage in favour of Y and a third mortgage again in favour of X. X sues on the first mortgage, obtains a decree and sells the property. Y applies for payment to him out of the surplus remaining after the first mortgage sued on is paid off. He is entitled to be so paid in priority to the third mortgage of X.³ But the words of the proviso are general and apply not only to a pre-existing incumbrance, i.e. an incumbrance existing independently of the decree ordering the sale of the property but also to an incumbrance which is created by the decree itself, as for instance, a charge created by the decree ordering

3 expression "to compel him to refund the assets" in this clause, was inclined to hold that
9 the plaintiff cannot ask for interest on the assets till the date of the suit.

19. Priority of debts — Clause (3). — It has been seen in Note 2 above that under Sections 270 and 271 of the Code of 1859 the creditor who first attached the property had a statutory priority, over the others, to have his debt satisfied in full.¹ It has also been seen that the law was changed by the Code of 1882 and that now all the decree-holders are placed on the same footing regardless of the order of attachment.² A obtains a decree personally against B. C obtains a decree against B making him liable to the extent of the assets of his father in his hands. C cannot claim any priority against A.³

In cases not coming under Section 73 but under O. 21 R. 52 as, for instance, in a case where assets have been received before any of the contending decree-holders have applied for execution, there is a conflict of decisions as to whether such assets are liable to rateable distribution. As to this, see Note 6 to O. 21 R. 52.

In the undermentioned case⁴ a patnidar brought to sale a darpatni tenure in execution of a decree for arrears of rent of such tenure. After satisfaction of the decree, the surplus proceeds were left in Court. The patnidar then obtained another decree against the same darpatnidar for arrears of rent accruing for a subsequent period in respect of the same tenure. It was held that the patnidar had no further lien for rent after the sale of the darpatni tenure, that the decree for rent in his favour was only a money decree, and that he was not entitled to any priority in respect of such decree and that the surplus sale proceeds in Court were liable to be divided rateably among all persons who had taken out execution of money decrees against the same judgment-debtor and had not obtained satisfaction.

It is a general principle of law that claims of the Crown or State are entitled to precedence over all other claims.⁵ A judgment-debt due to the Crown is entitled to priority over all other decrees.⁶ But the clause does not confer any jurisdiction on the executing Court to entertain a claim on behalf of the Government in the absence of any decree in support of it.⁷ In Oudh Commercial Bank Ltd. v. Secretary of State,⁸ Bhide, J., of the Lahore High Court observed as follows :

"I am unable to see that this sub-section confers any jurisdiction on the executing Court to entertain a claim on behalf of the Government in the absence of any decree in support of it. The sub-section only saves the rights of the Government, independent of the Section, such as they might be and merely appears to have reference

- 22a. Appropriation of amount received by way of rateable distribution.
1-24 — A decree-holder is not entitled to appropriate the sum he receives by way of rateable distribution in any way he likes. What he receives goes towards the payment of every rupee of his debt.¹

Illustration

A obtains a decree against B and C. The decree awards A a certain sum of money payable by B and also a further sum by way of costs payable by B and C. A receives a certain sum by way of rateable distribution under the decree. A is not entitled to appropriate the whole of this amount towards the amount of the decree proper and proceed against C for the entire amount of the costs on the footing that such amount has not been reduced by the rateable share received. Both the items in the decree debt must be deemed as reduced pro tanto.²

23. Application for rateable distribution is one for a step-in-aid of execution. — It has been seen in Note 8 above that a mere application for rateable distribution is not one for execution. Such an application however can be a step-in-aid of execution under Article 182 of the Limitation Act.¹

24. Appeal. — An order under this Section is not appealable as an order.¹ It will be appealable as a decree if the conditions of Section 47 are satisfied.² Where such an order determines questions between parties, i. e., between the judgment-debtor on the one hand, and the decree-holder on the other, it will fall under Section 47 and become appealable as a decree.³ It follows that an order determining a question between rival decree-holders will not be appealable as a decree⁴ unless such question is also one between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holders, in which case it would be appealable.⁵ So also, an order under the Section which affects not only the rival decree-

25. Revision. — A wrong order of distribution can be contested in a suit under clause (2). This other remedy being open, the High Courts will not, as a general rule, interfere in revision in such cases.¹ This, however, does not mean that they cannot interfere in revision.² Where the lower Court acts without jurisdiction or declines to exercise jurisdiction,³ or the remedy by suit is so inconvenient as to practically amount to no remedy,⁴ or is manifestly wrong,⁵ or the result of the suit, if brought, would be definite success,⁶ a revision will lie. Where the Court sets aside the order, it can order the amount wrongly paid to be returned to Court.⁷

RESISTANCE TO EXECUTION

74. [S. 330.] Where the Court is satisfied that the holder of a decree for the possession of immoveable property or that the purchaser of immoveable property sold in execution of a decree has been resisted or obstructed in obtaining possession of the property by the judgment-debtor or some person on his behalf and that such resistance or obstruction was without any just cause, the Court may, at the instance of the decree-holder or purchaser, order the judgment-debtor or such other person to be detained in the civil prison for a term which may extend to thirty days and may further direct that the decree-holder or purchaser be put into possession of the property.

[1877, S. 330; 1859, S. 228. See O. 21 Rr. 97 to 103.]

4. Resistance must be by judgment-debtor or some other person on his behalf.
5. What is resistance.
6. Possession.
7. Appeal.

1. Legislative changes. — These are referred to and discussed in their appropriate places in the Notes below.

2. Scope of the Section. — The corresponding Section of the old Code related entirely to decrees for possession.¹ The scope of the Section has now been widened by making it applicable to cases where a court auction-purchaser is resisted or obstructed in obtaining possession of the property purchased by him.

The old Section contained the words "without prejudice to any penalty to which such judgment-debtor or other person may be liable under the Indian Penal Code or any other law for such resistance or obstruction." These words have been omitted in the present Section apparently as being unnecessary. The law, it is conceived, must be regarded as being the same under the present Section, notwithstanding the said omission.

In addition to the powers which Courts have under the ordinary law to punish disobedience of judicial orders, the High Courts in India can enforce obedience to their orders by taking proceedings for contempt.²

For detailed provisions, see O. 21 Rr. 97 to 103.

INCIDENTAL PROCEEDINGS

COMMISSIONS

Power of Court to issue
Commissions.

75. [New.] Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, the Court may issue a commission —

- (a) to examine any person;
- (b) to make a local investigation;
- (c) to examine or adjust accounts; or
- (d) to make a partition.

[See Order XXVI.]

1. Issue of commissions. — This Section is new and defines and limits the power of the Court to issue commissions. The detailed provisions are set forth in Order 26, but they do not amplify the scope of this Section.¹ Where, therefore, it is not necessary for the purposes set forth in the Section to issue a commission, it is not competent for the Court to do so.²

Though the Court has power to issue a commission, it cannot make over the whole case³ or a material issue⁴ to the Commissioner for trial on the merits. Nor should it issue a commission to two persons⁵ or issue a succession of commissions covering the same ground.⁶

This Section and Order 26 deal with cases in which a Commissioner is appointed either by the Court suo motu or on the application by either party. These provisions do not apply to cases in which the parties consent or agree to the appointment of a Commissioner for any particular purpose. Hence, where in a suit for infringement of copyright a Commissioner is appointed by the consent of both the parties to record evidence, the evidence recorded by the Commissioner is admissible in evidence although the case does not come under the Rules in Order 26. But, the opinion of the Commissioner is no evidence and cannot be considered by the Court.⁷

2. Commission to examine any person. — See O. 26 Rr. 1 to 8.

3. Local investigation. — A Court ought not to hold a local investigation with a view to gather information on which it may base its judgment, though it may inspect the locality with a view to understand the evidence. Where additional information is required,¹ the proper course is to appoint a Commissioner whose report may be used in evidence and who may himself be examined as a witness.¹

Where a matter has been referred to a Commissioner for local investigation, it is not safe for the Court to act as an expert and to overrule the report of the Commissioner whose integrity is unquestioned.²

4. Commission to examine accounts. — See O. 26 Rr. 11 and 12.

5. Commission to make partitions. — See O. 26 Rr. 13 to 18.

76. [S. 386.] (1) A commission for the examination of any person may be issued to any Court (not being a Commission to another Court. High Court) situate in a province other than the province in which the Court of issue is situate and having jurisdiction in the place in which the person to be examined resides.

(2) Every Court receiving a commission for the examination of any person under sub-section (1) shall examine him or cause him to be examined pursuant thereto, and the commission, when it has been duly executed, shall be returned together with the evidence taken under it to the Court from which it was issued, unless the order for issuing the commission has otherwise directed, in which case the commission shall be returned in terms of such order.

^b79. Subject to the provisions of sections 179 and 185 of the Government of India Act, 1935, in a suit by or against the Crown the authority to be named as plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, shall be —

Suits by or against
^a[the Crown.]

(a) in the case of a suit by or against the Central Government, the Governor-General in Council before the establishment of the Federation of India, and thereafter, the Federation ;

(b) in the case of a suit by or against a Provincial Government, the Province ; and

(c) in the case of a suit by or against the Crown Representative, the Secretary of State.

[1877, S. 416 ; See O. 27.]

a. Substituted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, for "the Government."

b. Section substituted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, for the original Section 79.

1. Legislative changes.—The present Section was substituted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, for the original Section 79, the change being necessitated by the Government of India Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. V, Ch. 42). (See Sections 3 and 176 of that Act.) The old Section ran as follows :

"(1) Suits by or against the Government shall be instituted by or against the Secretary of State for India in Council.

"(2) Nothing in this Section shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any information exhibited by the Advocate-General in exercise of the power declared by Section 111 of the East India Company Act, 1813."

It will be seen that under the old Section, all suits by or against the Government were to be instituted by or against the Secretary of State for India in Council. After the passing of the Government of India Act, 1935, such suits will fall under the three categories enumerated in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of the present Section and the Section has accordingly been changed so as to deal specifically with each such category.

2. Scope and applicability of the Section. — This Section declares the procedure where suits are to be brought by or against the Government; it does not deal with the question as to what are the claims and liabilities enforceable against the Government.¹ These must be determined only with reference to the provisions of the Government of India Act, 1935. (See Sections 172 to 180 of the Act.) The rule of procedure under this Section applies also to appeals.²

3. In what cases suit will lie against the Government. — Under the English Constitution a person aggrieved by an act or omission of a Government servant or department can seek his remedy only by a petition of right.¹ The liabilities of the Crown upon a petition of right extend to detention of land, chattels or money of the subject and to breach of contract.²

In India, Section 176 sub-section 1 of the Government of India Act 1935, provides as follows :—

"(1) The Federation may sue or be sued by the name of the Federation of India and a Provincial Government may sue or be sued by the name of the Province and, without prejudice to the subsequent provisions of this chapter, may, subject to any provisions which may be made by the Act of the Federal or Provincial Legislature enacted by virtue of powers conferred on that Legislature by this Act, sue or be sued in relation to their respective affairs in the like cases as the Secretary of State in Council might have sued or been sued if this Act had not been passed."

So, under the above sub-section, the test to see if a suit lies against the Crown is whether in the circumstances of the case, a suit would have lain against the Secretary of State for India in Council, if the Government of India Act of 1935 had not been passed. For this, Section 32 of the Government of India Act of 1915 must be seen. Sub-section 2 of that Section runs as follows :—

"Every person shall have the same remedies against the Secretary of State in Council as he might have had against the East India Company if the Government of India Act, 1858 and this Act had not been passed."

The above sub-section corresponds to the following provision in Section 65 of the Government of India Act of 1858 conferring the right of suit against the Government³ :

"... all persons and bodies politic shall and may have and take the same suits, remedies and proceedings legal and equitable, against the Secretary of State in Council of India as they could have done against the said Company" (the East India Company).

The East India Company was engaged in transactions partly in the exercise of sovereign powers delegated to it by the Crown and partly on its own account, which, without delegation of sovereign powers might be carried on by private individuals.⁴ Therefore, in so far as a person was aggrieved by an act done in the exercise of sovereign rights, the East India Company was liable in the same way as the Crown upon a petition of right. It follows that the Crown in India is also liable in respect of all such acts, that is, detention of land, chattels or money and breach of contract.⁵ In respect of torts by its servants in the exercise of sovereign powers, the Company was not, and the Crown in India will not be, liable unless it had ordered or ratified the tortious act.⁶ The reason is that the doctrine of principal and agent can apply where the acts done by the Officers of the Government are done in the performance of duties imposed by the Legislature, though the officers themselves are appointed by the Government; and in exercising or exceeding such authority they cannot be considered to have been the agents of the appointing authority so as to render the latter liable.⁷ In so far as the East India Company was engaged in transactions on its own account, which, without delegation of sovereign right can be carried on by private individuals, it was liable like any other private individual. The Crown in India will consequently be liable in respect of those acts also *which might be done by private individuals without the delegation of sovereign rights.*⁸

It was held, before the Government of India Act of 1935, that contracts with the Secretary of State for India must conform to the provisions of Section 29 of the Government of India Act, 1915; and where they did not conform to such provisions they were not binding on the Secretary of State.⁹ It is obvious that the same principle will also apply now and the Crown will not be liable under any contract unless such contract conformed to the provisions of the Government of India Act of 1935.

4. Act of State. — See Section 9 Note 57 "Acts of State."

5. Suits against State Railways. — Before the passing of the Government of India Act of 1935, it was held that a suit against a State Railway must be brought against the Secretary of State for India in Council.¹ See now, Section 185 of the Government of India Act of 1935.

6. Cases in which Government is a necessary party. — The rules governing the joinder of ordinary persons as parties would also apply to the joinder of the Government as a party.¹ Thus in a suit to set aside a sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act 1 of 1895), the Government is in the position of a decree-holder and as such is a necessary party.² Similarly, in a suit to recover possession of a chur which had been leased by the Government to the defendant, the Government as claiming a proprietary right in the land is a necessary party.³ See also the undermentioned cases⁴ showing in what cases Government was held to be a necessary party and in what cases not.

7. Jurisdiction in suits against Government. — It was held, before the Government of India Act of 1935, that a suit against the Secretary of State for India could only be brought in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action arose and that the words "dwell," "carry on business" or "personally work for gain" which occur in Sections 16, 19 and 20 of the Code and Clause 12 of the Letters Patent, did not apply to the Secretary of State for India.¹ It is conceived that the same principle will apply to suits against the Crown after the passing of the above Act. (See Notes to Section 20.)

8. Form of suit against Government. — It was held, before the Government of India Act of 1935, that a suit against Government must be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council¹ and that it could not be brought against the "Secretary of State."² Where a suit was wrongly brought against an officer of the Government, it was held that the plaint should be amended by substituting the name "the Secretary of State for India in Council" for the name of the officer.³ Under the Code of 1859, a suit against the Agent to the Governor-General on the part of the Government was held to be a suit substantially against the Government.⁴

In the undermentioned case,⁵ a suit against the Government was dismissed and an appeal was filed against the decree dismissing the suit. The case was one in which under Section 179 sub-section 1 of the Government of India Act of 1935 the appeal should have been lodged against the Government of the Punjab or the Secretary of State. But the respondent to the appeal was named as the Secretary of State for India in Council. It was held that although this was inconsistent with the provisions of the above Section, the mere addition of the words "for India in Council" did not justify the dismissal of the appeal and it could only be construed as a misdescription of the respondent.

9. Information exhibited by the Advocate-General. — As seen in Note 1 ante, sub-section 2 of the old Section, which provided that nothing in the Section should be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any information exhibited by the Advocate-General in exercise of the power declared by Section 111 of the East India Company Act 1813,¹ has been omitted from the Section substituted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

defendants one of whom is the Crown or a public officer and notice under this Section has not been given, the whole suit is not bad but is bad only with reference to the Crown or the public officer.

The Section deals with two classes of cases —

- (1) Suits against the Crown.
- (2) Suits against Public Officers.

In the first class, notice under this Section must be given in all cases.⁸ In the second class, notice under this Section is necessary only where the suit is in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity.⁹

It has been held by the High Court of Lahore that an application under Para. 17 of the Second Schedule of this Code is not a suit within the meaning of this Section, so as to be governed by its provisions.¹⁰ See also Note 12 to Para. 20 of the Second Schedule, infra.

3. Applicability of the Section. — The provisions of this Section have been made inapplicable to the following cases —

- (1) Suits against the Official Trustee in which no relief is claimed against him personally. See Section 16 of the Official Trustees Act (II of 1913).
- (2) Suits against the Administrator-General in which no relief is claimed against him personally. See Section 41 of the Administrator-General's Act (III of 1913).
- (3) Suits of the class mentioned in Section 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887). See Section 94 of that Act.

The provisions of this Section do not apply to a suit brought pursuant to an undertaking given under Section 14 of the Bombay City Land Revenue Act (II of 1876).¹

Every suit instituted under Section 42 (5) of the Burma Forest Act (IV of 1902) is subject to the provisions of this Section.

4. Act of State. — See Note 57 Section 9, ante.

5. "Act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity." — In suits against public officers, notice under this Section is necessary only —

- (1) if the suit is in respect of any act done by such public officer, and
- (2) such act purports to have been done by such public officer in his official capacity.¹

Where a suit is not in respect of any act done by the public officer, no notice is that this was limited to acts done negligently or inadvertently by the public officer and did not extend to acts done mala fide by him. The following cases,¹⁰ on the other hand, have held that the Section applies to all acts of public officers whether done bona fide or mala fide. In Koti Reddi v. Subbiah,¹¹ it was held that the words "any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity" mean any act intended to seem to be done by him in his official capacity. If, therefore, the act, whether done in good faith or not, was such as is ordinarily done by the officer in the course of his duties, and he desired that other persons should believe that he was so acting, the act is one purporting to be done by him in his official capacity within the meaning of the Section.¹² Having regard to the general principles of interpretation of statutes¹³ and to the dictum of the Privy Council in *Bhag Chand v. Secretary of State*¹⁴ that the Section does not admit of any implications or exceptions, the rulings referred to above which held that the act must be one done negligently or inadvertently cannot be considered to be good law.

But the words "act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity" will not cover acts which are outside the sphere of his duties.¹⁵ Thus, where a public officer insults, uses defamatory language, or assaults his subordinate,¹⁶ or an investigating police officer assaults a witness,¹⁷ or a public officer seizes property which he has no authority to seize,¹⁸ the acts cannot be considered to be "acts purporting to be done" by him in his official capacity and notice under this Section is not necessary.

9. Suits against Railway Administration. — The Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890) provides for notice of suit to be given in suits against the Railway Administration. See Sections 77 and 140 of that Act and the undermentioned cases.¹ Where, however, the Railway is administered by the Government, a notice under the Railways Act alone is not enough and will not be a substitute for the notice required under Section 80.² Conversely, in such cases, a notice under this Section alone will not be sufficient; a notice under the Railways Act also will be necessary.³

10. Notice is a condition precedent to the institution of the suit. — It has been seen in Note 2 above that the Section is mandatory and admits of no exceptions.¹ A Court is debarred from entertaining a suit instituted without complying with the requirements of the Section.² The only course open to the Court in a suit instituted without giving the notice required will be to reject it under Order 7 Rule 11.

11. Suits on contracts and suits for injunctions. — It was held by the High Court of Bombay in the undermentioned cases¹ that the Section has no application to suits founded on contracts. There was also a conflict of opinion in the various High Courts as to whether the Section applies to suits for injunctions.² It has now been authoritatively laid down by the Privy Council in Bhag Chand v. Secretary of State³ that the language of the Section is mandatory and admits of no implications or exceptions, that the Section is applicable to all forms of action and all kinds of relief, and that the view that the Section is inapplicable where the whole or part of the relief claimed is an injunction is not correct. But the decision of the Privy Council cannot be taken to mean that notice is necessary in every suit for injunction against the Secretary of State or a Public Officer,⁴ without regard to the fact whether the other conditions necessary for the applicability of the Section are satisfied. Thus, the Section will apply only when the suit is in respect of an act done by the Secretary of State or the Public Officer. The words "act purporting to be done" cover only a past act, and do not include a future act threatened to be done. A suit therefore merely for an injunction, not based upon any past act of the Public Officer, is not within the scope of the Section and no notice is necessary in such a case.⁵ But if the suit is laid on a past act of such Officer, the fact that an injunction is also prayed for will not take the case out of the operation of the Section.⁶ The High Court of Lahore, however, seems to be of the opinion that the Privy Council decision will apply even to suits merely in respect of acts threatened to be done.⁷

13. state the cause of action and the relief claimed;⁴ the phrase "cause of action" need not in this connexion be narrowly construed and the notice is sufficient if it informs the defendant substantially of the ground of complaint.⁵ Where a claim is made in the notice for a larger amount of money as due from the defendant, the fact that in the suit the claim is reduced to a smaller amount does not change the cause of action for the suit or make the notice invalid.⁶ Where the cause of action has not arisen at all, a notice under the Section is not valid.⁷ A notice which does not state the cause of action or the intention to file a suit,⁸ or a notice merely objecting to, and asking for, the reconsideration of the order complained of,⁹ or a mere objection to an entry in the settlement roll under the Bengal Tenancy Act,¹⁰ or a mere report to the Deputy Commissioner,¹¹ will not constitute a valid notice under the Section.

It is also essential that the notice should state the names, descriptions and places of residence of all the plaintiffs.¹² But, there is a conflict of decisions as to whether a notice otherwise sufficient under the Section is invalid on the ground that it has not been given by all the plaintiffs. According to one view such notice is sufficient¹³ while the other view is that such notice is not sufficient.¹⁴

A notice given by a pleader on behalf of his client is sufficient for the purpose of this Section.¹⁵

14. Service of notice. — As is clear from the language of the Section, a notice, in the case of the Secretary of State in Council, must be delivered to, or left at the office of a Secretary to the Local Government or the Collector of the District, and, in the case of a public officer, delivered to him or left at his office.¹ This delivery or leaving of the notice may be either personal or by post.² "Collector of the District" means the Collector of the District where the suit is instituted. A suit instituted at Sealdah based on a notice given to the Collector of Purneah is untenable.³

15. Waiver of notice and effect thereof. — A notice under the Section is given for the benefit of the defendant and there is nothing to prevent him from waiving the notice or from being estopped by his conduct from pleading the want of notice.¹ Thus, where objection as to notice was taken in the written statement, but no issue was raised on the point and no objection was taken subsequently at any stage of the trial in the Court of first instance, it was held that the notice was waived.² Where no objection is raised in the Court of first instance, it cannot be pleaded for the first time in special appeal.³ But the mere failure to raise the objection in the written statement cannot per se be regarded as a waiver, if it was raised practically before the trial had commenced and before any prejudice could have been caused to the plaintiffs by the lateness of the stage at which the objection was raised.⁴

An objection as to notice cannot be taken by a defendant other than the Secretary of State or other public officer for whose benefit the notice is intended,⁵ or by a transferee from the Secretary of State.⁶

16. Notice, if necessary for amendment of plaint. — Where an amendment of the plaint is necessitated by the discovery of facts previously unknown to the plaintiff and the relief asked for in the plaint is not altered by the amendments, a further notice under the Section is not necessary.¹ But where the amendment introduces a new cause of action not specified in the original notice, as for example where a suit based on negligence is sought to be amended into one based on nuisance, a further notice is necessary.² Similarly, where a plaint against a person is sought to be amended by substituting the Secretary of State in the place of the original defendant,³

But it has been held that Section 15 (2) of the Limitation Act has no application to periods of limitation not prescribed by the Limitation Act itself, but by any special law such as the Bengal Tenancy Act.³ In such cases, therefore, the period of notice cannot be excluded in computing the period of limitation prescribed by such special law.⁴ Nor can the period of notice be excluded where there is no cause of action at all against the Secretary of State or public officer and the latter is erroneously impleaded as a defendant in the suit.⁵

Suits against alien enemies not prohibited. See Note 1.

1. Scope and applicability of the Section. — Sections 83 to 88 of the Code deal with suits by aliens and by or against Foreign Rulers and Rulers of Indian States. This Section deals with the question as to when aliens may sue in the Courts of British India.

Alien friends are on the same footing as if they were subjects of His Majesty. Thus, an alien prince is competent to sue in a British Indian Court.¹ A foreign corporation can, in its corporate character, sue in British Indian Courts, even if it is not registered under the Indian Companies Act.²

An alien enemy residing in British India with the permission of the Central Government may also sue in British Indian Courts.³ The Section, however, does not preclude suits against aliens not so residing, or affect their right of defence in such suits.⁴ As to who is an alien enemy, see Note 2.

2. Alien enemy. — The words "alien enemy" include not only the subjects of a state at war with Great Britain but also British subjects and subjects of a neutral State who are voluntarily residing in a hostile country.¹ The test, therefore, to determine whether a person is an alien enemy, is his place of residence or the place where he carries on business and not his nationality.² In Janson v. Driefontein Consolidated Mines, Ltd.,³ Lord Lindley observed as follows:

"When considering questions arising with an alien enemy, it is not the nationality of a person but his place of business during the war that is important. An Englishman carrying on business in an enemy's country is treated as an alien enemy in considering the validity or invalidity of his commercial contracts."

The residence, however, must be a voluntary one. A prisoner of war kept in the enemy country cannot be regarded as an alien enemy.⁴ But the residence need not be a permanent one, provided it is not of a temporary character.⁵ A person residing in a hostile country for a substantial period of time acquires the disabilities of an alien enemy during the period, unless such residence is with the consent of the Crown.⁶

3. Suits by alien enemies. — An alien enemy residing in a foreign country cannot sue in British Indian Courts.¹ Thus, where some of the partners are resident in a hostile country, the firm cannot maintain an action in British Indian Courts.² An alien enemy residing in British India can sue in such Courts if such residence is with the permission of the Governor-General in Council.³ The permission need not be express, but may be presumed from the circumstances. Where the alien enemy has resided in British India from before the outbreak of war and continues to remain after such outbreak without being ordered to remove himself, permission may be presumed.⁴ Where a German lady filed a petition for divorce in the Allahabad High Court, while England was at war with Germany, the fact that she was not interned was construed as an implied permission to reside, by the Government of India.⁵

The Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has, however, in the undermentioned case⁶ taken the view that the permission must be express. The observation is obiter and is against the trend of authorities and cannot be considered sound.

4. Service of summons in a foreign country. — A summons can be transmitted by a British Indian Court to the Foreign Office through the High Court in England for being served on the defendant residing in any enemy country.¹

5. Contracts with alien enemies. — It is a universal principle of public law that commercial intercourse between States at war with each other is interdicted.¹ But this prohibition is, however, confined to intercourse which is inconsistent with the state of war between the belligerents, including any act or contract which tends to increase the resources of the enemy. A lease granted after the commencement of hostilities, by an alien enemy in British India on behalf of one who is not shown to be an enemy subject, the rent whereof is intended to be used in this country and by persons who are not enemies, is enforceable.² A debtor indebted to an alien enemy is not entitled to a suspension of interest on his debt from the date the war began to the date when the enemy obtained a licence to trade in British India.³

This Section does not apply to proceedings under Section 184 of the Companies Act of 1913.⁵ The reason is that if the Court makes an order under Section 184 and places the name of a Native Prince or Chief upon the list of contributories, it does not thereby enforce a jurisdiction against that Native Prince or Chief. But proceedings under Sections 186 and 187 of the Companies Act of 1913 are proceedings in a Civil Court within the meaning of Section 141 and by virtue of that Section, this Section applies to such proceedings.⁶

4. Consent when to be obtained. — The consent referred to in the Section must be obtained before the institution of the suit. A consent obtained after the institution of the suit will not validate the institution thereof.¹ Where the plaintiff wishes to amend the plaint by adding a new relief, it is necessary that sanction under this Section should be obtained.² Where the defendant becomes a Ruling Chief or Sovereign Prince subsequent to the institution of the suit, it has been held that the suit cannot be continued without the sanction.³ The reason is that the words "to sue" in the Section include every step from the presentation of the plaint to the recovery of judgment.⁴

5. "And is to be sued with reference to such property or for money charged thereon" — Sub-section (2) (c). — Sub-section (2) (c) of the old Section referred only to cases where the Prince or Chief was to be sued with reference to the possession of immovable property or for money charged thereon. The substitution of the word "property" for the word "possession" has widened the scope of the Section by including all cases with reference to the property in the possession of the Prince or Chief.

A suit for maintenance or for maintenance coupled with a prayer for the creation of a charge therefor on certain properties, is not a suit for "money charged" on those properties within the meaning of clause (c).¹

6. Suit by tenant of immovable property — Sub-section (5). — A suit for a declaration of a hereditary proprietary right to remain in possession of lands without payment of rent¹ or a suit by the plaintiff as co-sharer against the Ruling Chief as a cosharer for a share of the profits² is not a suit brought "as a tenant of immovable property" within the meaning of sub-section (5) and is not maintainable without the sanction required by the Section.

Sub-section 5 refers to a suit against a Sovereign Prince or Chief and does not dispense with the consent required under sub-section 3 for execution proceedings against such Prince or Chief.³

7. Waiver of objection to want of consent. — It is a general principle of law that parties can waive irregularities in procedure.¹ Similarly, a person for whose benefit a privilege has been conferred can waive the privilege. The question has arisen as to whether the objection on the ground of want of sanction under this Section can be waived by the native Prince or Chief. Before the decision of the Privy Council in Gaekwar Baroda State Railway v. Hafiz Habib-ul-Haq,² there was a conflict of decisions on this question. It was held by the Bombay High Court that such objection could be waived by the defendant Prince or Chief and that contesting the suit on the merits without protest amounted to such waiver.³ The Calcutta,⁴ Lahore,⁵ Patna⁶ and Allahabad⁷ High Courts also took a similar view. According to the High Court of Patna, even an application for adjournment would amount to a waiver of the privilege.⁸ But it was held that the fact that the Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief waived his privilege in one suit did not preclude him from pleading it in another suit.⁹ The Madras High Court, however, dissented from the view that the privilege could be waived.¹⁰ The ground on which that view was based was that the recognition of cases of waiver as excepted from the provisions of international law cannot be imported into the clear language of the Code.

The above conflict has been set at rest by the decision of the Privy Council referred to above, by which it was held that the provisions of this Section are imperative and cannot be waived. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows: "Further, as already pointed out, the provisions relating to this matter are statutory. They are contained in Sections 86 and 87, Civil Procedure Code; they are imperative and having regard to the public purposes which they serve, they cannot, in their Lordships' opinion, be waived in the manner suggested by the High Court."

8. Defence of set-off — No consent is necessary. — Where a person does not actually sue as plaintiff but only puts forward a claim of set-off in his defence to a suit by a Ruling Chief, no sanction is necessary to raise such a claim.¹

9. Inquiry into the validity of consent. — The introduction of the words "unless it appears to the consenting authority" effects an important change in the pre-existing law. Its effect is to show that the opinion of the consenting authority is final on the question whether any of the clauses (a) to (c) is satisfied in a given instance.¹ The cases² which, before the passing of the present Code, held that it is open to or incumbent on the Courts to examine the correctness of the decision of the Government are no longer law.

10. Effect of non-compliance with the Section. — A suit against a Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief instituted without the previous sanction of the Government

1. Legislative changes. — The following are the main changes introduced in the Section —

1. For the words "payment or property" the words "debt, sum of money, or other property, moveable or immovable," have been substituted.
2. For the words "whose only interest is that of a mere stake-holder" are substituted the words "who claims no interest therein other than for charges or costs."¹

The other provisions in the old Code relating to interpleader suits have been enacted in Order 35 of the First Schedule.

2. Scope and applicability of the Section. — Where X is under a liability for any debt, sum of money, or other property, claimed adversely by A or B or more, and he desires protection against a wrong payment or delivery, he can file a suit under this Section. The only way, in fact, in which he can protect himself is by filing such a suit; otherwise if he litigated with the claimant separately, he would have to pay the costs of the successful claimant.¹ It is necessary that the liability to some one must be admitted and there must be no collusion² and no interest in the subject-matter other than for charges or costs. A suit under this Section is called an interpleader suit because the plaintiff is really not interested in the matter, but only the defendants interplead as to their claims. In fact each of the defendants so interpleading is virtually in the position of a plaintiff and his claim will be governed by the rules of the Limitation Act.³

In order to determine whether a suit is an interpleader suit under the Section, the Court must have regard to all the prayers in the plaint. The mere fact that the plaintiff requires the defendants to interplead as regards one of the reliefs claimed would not necessarily make it an interpleader suit.⁴

Where a party in the position of a mere stake-holder is made a defendant in a suit, his proper course is to deposit the money (if it is a suit for money) into Court and ask that the parties really interested may be substituted for himself as defendants.⁵ Such deposit by him is a valid discharge for him and if the Court paid it to a wrong person he is not responsible.⁶ This Section is not applicable to suits and other proceedings under the Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926) and the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908).

3. Claims must be bona fide and adverse to one another. — The claims of the defendants must be bona fide ones, though they need not have a common origin.¹ The Court must be satisfied that there is a real question to be tried. A mere pretext of conflicting claims is not sufficient.²

The defendants must also claim the money or property adversely to one another from the plaintiff.³ A decision given on the claims of the co-defendants in an interpleader suit will operate as res judicata between them.⁴

It is, however, not necessary that the plaintiff must show the existence of an apparent title in each of the defendants claiming the property in dispute.⁵ Nor is it necessary that the claims should be legal claims or rights. Equitable claims and rights can be entertained and given effect to.⁶

4. Claims must be with reference to the same subject-matter. — The rival claims must be with reference to the same debt, sum of money, or other property,¹ but not necessarily to the same extent.² It is thus not necessary that each of the defendants should claim the whole of the subject-matter of the suit.³

The "same debt, sum of money, or other property" would not, it is conceived, include a claim for unliquidated damages⁴ though it might include a chose in action.⁵

5. Plaintiff should claim no interest in the subject-matter. — The plaintiff must be in an impartial position. If he has, in some way, identified himself with one of the parties in the sense that it will make a difference to him which of the two succeeds, an interpleader suit will not lie.¹ Thus, a person who has taken an indemnity from one of the claimants, cannot file a suit under this Section,² though he will not be refused relief, if he has merely a natural affinity for one side rather than the other.³ A right of lien, e. g., for wharfage, demurrage or freight, is not an interest in the property for the purposes of this Section.⁴

6. "Charges or costs," meaning of. — The words "charges or costs" include costs of suit, freight, warehouse rent, dock rent, wharfage, demurrage and other charges.¹ A lien can be declared for such charges in an interpleader suit,² but

SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS

ARBITRATION

89. [New.] (1) Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, or by any other law for the time being in force, all references to arbitration whether by an order in a suit or otherwise, and all proceedings thereunder, shall be governed by the provisions contained in the Second Schedule.

(2) The provisions of the Second Schedule shall not affect any arbitration pending at the commencement of this Code, but shall apply to any arbitration after that date under any agreement or reference made before the commencement of this Code.

2. Applicability of the Arbitration Act.
3. "Any other law for the time being in force."
See Note 9 to O. 23 R. 3.
4. Agreement to refer to arbitration.
5. Suit on award.

1. Scope of the Section. — In their Statement of Objects and Reasons, the Special Committee state as follows :—

"We are of opinion that the best course would undoubtedly be to eliminate from the Code all the clauses as to arbitration and insert them in a new and comprehensive Arbitration Act. There are perhaps difficulties as to this at present. We have determined therefore to leave the arbitration clauses much as they are in the present Code but we have placed them in a Schedule in the hope that at no distant date they may be transferred into a comprehensive Arbitration Act."¹

Schedule II of the Code deals with arbitrations under three heads² :—

- (1) Where the parties to the litigation desire to refer to arbitration any matter in difference between them in the suit, in that case all proceedings from first to last are under the supervision of the Court. Sch. II, Paragraphs 1 to 16 deal with such matters.
- (2) Where the parties without recourse to litigation agree to refer their differences to arbitration and it is desired that the agreement of reference should have the sanction of the Court, in that case all further proceedings are under the supervision of the Court. Paras. 17 to 19 of Schedule II deal with such matters.

- (3) Where the agreement of reference is made and the arbitration itself takes place without the intervention of the Court and the assistance of the Court is only sought in order to give effect to the award. This is dealt with by Paragraphs 20 to 23 of Schedule II.

This Section declares that all references to arbitration and all proceedings thereunder shall be governed by the provisions of Schedule II except as otherwise provided by (a) the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899³ and (b) by any other law for the time being in force.

2. Applicability of the Arbitration Act. — The Indian Arbitration Act applies only to arbitration by agreement without the intervention of a Court of Justice,¹ and even this only in cases in respect of the subject-matter of which a suit could be instituted in a Presidency Town.²

By Section 2 of the Act, the Local Government may declare the Act applicable to local areas other than Presidency Towns as if they were Presidency Towns.³

3. "Any other law for the time being in force." — See Note 9 to O. 23 R. 3.

4. Agreement to refer to arbitration. — A mere agreement to refer to arbitration in a pending suit cannot amount to an adjustment under O. 23 R. 3.¹ See also Note 9 to O. 23 R. 3.

5. Suit on award. — An award is the outcome of the submission of the parties to be bound by a submission agreed to by them and so can be specifically enforced like any other contract.¹ Under the old Code an award could be enforced summarily under Section 525 or in a regular suit. Section 89 of this Code has not altered the law on this point.² See Notes to Sch. II, Para. 20.

2. Re-opening of case.

1. "In the manner prescribed." — "In the manner prescribed" means prescribed by Rules in the First Schedule. The Section is based on Sections 527-551 of the old Code, which are now arranged in Order 36. Parties may enter into an agreement and avail themselves of the provisions of Order 36 for the purpose of obtaining the opinion of the Court on a case stated by them.¹

2. Re-opening of case. — Where a special case is settled by consent it can only be re-opened by mutual consent.¹

SUITS RELATING TO PUBLIC MATTERS

91. [New.] (1) In the case of a public nuisance² the Advocate-General, or two or more persons⁴ having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate-General, may institute a suit, though no special damage has been caused, for a declaration⁶ and injunction⁷ or for such other relief⁸ as may be appropriate to the circumstances of the case.

1. Scope and object of the Section. — Under the Common law a private person cannot maintain a suit in respect of a public nuisance unless he is able to show that he suffered special damage thereby.¹ This Section provides an exception to that rule and enacts that such a suit can be maintained even without proof of special damage provided the consent of the Advocate-General is obtained and the other conditions of the Section are satisfied.²

The Section enacts only a rule of procedure and does not, as is made clear by sub-section (2), deprive any person of any right which he may have independently of its provisions, as for instance, a right to sue in respect of a public nuisance on proof of special damage.³

2. "Public nuisance," meaning of. — The words "public nuisance" have not been defined in the Code. But by virtue of Section 3 (44) of the General Clauses Act, the words mean a public nuisance as defined by the Indian Penal Code.¹ Under Section 268 of the Indian Penal Code, "a public nuisance" is an act or illegal omission which causes any common injury, danger or annoyance to the public or to the people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity, or which must necessarily cause injury, obstruction, danger or annoyance to persons who may have occasion to use any public right.

The essence of the definition is that the injury, danger or annoyance must be to the public, or to the people in general who occupy the property in the vicinity or who use such public right.² Thus, the obstruction of a public highway,³ or the pollution of public waterways,⁴ or the storage of inflammable or other material likely to endanger life or health,⁵ or the causing of annoyance to the public in any other way,⁶ is a public nuisance. Acts, however, which offend the sentiments of merely a particular class of persons,⁷ or annoyance caused to particular persons only,⁸ do not constitute public nuisances. Thus, the placing of a Muhammadan symbol in the neighbourhood of Hindu temple,⁹ or the carrying on of a tinman's trade causing annoyance to the inhabitants of three sets of chambers only,¹⁰ is not a public nuisance. Similarly, where a suit is brought on behalf of the members of one community to vindicate their right to take out processions along a certain route, the suit is not one for the removal of a public nuisance within the meaning of this Section, but is a suit for remedying the infringement of a special right exercised by that community.¹¹

Whether a particular thing or act is an actionable nuisance at all, is to be decided with reference to the circumstances of each case.¹² In Sturges v. Bridgman,¹³ Thesiger, L. J., observed as follows: "Whether anything is a nuisance or not is to be determined not only by an abstract consideration of the thing itself but in reference to its circumstances. What would be a nuisance in Belgram Square would not necessarily be so in Bermondsey."

No length of time can legitimate a public nuisance.¹⁴ Nor will the fact that a person or company is acting under statutory powers enable such person or company to cause or continue a nuisance, unless the creation thereof was expressly contemplated by the Statute.¹⁵

There are two kinds of public nuisances, actual and constructive, or public nuisances in fact and public nuisances in law. What is meant by a constructive public nuisance or a public nuisance in law is that which is only wrong because it contravenes the provisions of an Act such as the building rules of a Municipal Act. Section 91 is restricted in terms to public nuisances in fact and a constructive public nuisance can be no ground for a suit under that Section.¹⁶ As to actionable private nuisance, see Pollock on Torts and the undermentioned cases.¹⁷

3. Obstruction to public highway.—An obstruction to a public thoroughfare is a public nuisance.¹ The public is entitled to the full width of the public highway, however wide it may be, and any obstruction thereto infringes the right of the public to that extent.² Thus, the building of a construction over any part of a public street,³ or the cutting of trenches across it⁴ necessarily causing obstruction to persons who may have occasion to use the street, is a public nuisance. Similarly, an excessive user of the highway incompatible with the reasonable exercise of rights by other members of the public,⁵ or an illegitimate user of the road amounting to trespass, will amount to a public nuisance.⁶ So also acts committed on or adjoining a highway, interfering with or endangering the safe user thereof, will amount to a public nuisance.⁷

A navigable river is a public highway and any act which interferes with the right of the public to freely navigate is a public nuisance.⁸ A slight encroachment will not necessarily constitute a public nuisance. There must be some evidence that the encroachment causes one of the results specified in Section 268 of the Indian Penal Code.⁹

A village pathway is not a public highway and a suit for relief in respect thereof is not governed by this Section.¹⁰ The right of a person to have access to his land abutting on a public highway is a public right,¹¹ but a right, acquired by prescription of immediate access from private property to a public highway is a private right.¹² See also the case cited below.¹³

Every class or community has a right to conduct a religious procession with its appropriate observances along a highway so that the procession does not interfere with the ordinary use of such streets by the public and subject to such directions as the Magistrates may lawfully give to prevent obstructions of the thoroughfare or breaches of the public peace.¹⁴ A suit in respect of an obstruction to such a right is one respecting the infringement of a civil right of an individual and not one relating to a public nuisance. No special damage need be proved to maintain such a suit.¹⁵

The remedies are concurrent and the pursuit of one does not bar the other. Thus, where A obstructs a public highway by occupying and enclosing a portion thereof, he may be prosecuted under Section 268 of the Indian Penal Code. This will not preclude a suit under this Section by the Advocate-General or by two or more persons with his consent. Nor will the institution of the said two proceedings bar a suit by a private individual whose house abuts on that highway and the access to whose house is cut off by such enclosure by A causing him special damage.²

6. Declaration. — Where the relief claimed in respect of a suit is a right of easement and not in respect of any public nuisance, no declaration that the place in suit is a public thoroughfare can be granted on the mere fact that the plaintiff's witnesses described it as a public place.¹

As to declarations of right to take religious processions in public streets, see Note 3 above.

7. Injunction. — Where a nuisance is temporary and intermittent,¹ or occasional,² no injunction will be granted. Nor will it be granted where the injury is trifling in amount and effect.³ But even slight nuisances, if they are of frequent occurrence, will justify the grant of an injunction.⁴ Thus, a continuous ringing of bells will be stopped by an injunction.⁵ Similarly, where the defendant claims a right to continue the nuisance,⁶ or the act committed tends to the injury of the public,⁷ or causes damage to private individuals,⁸ an injunction will be granted.

Where, however, the plaintiff has acquiesced in the nuisance,⁹ or where there is no proof or prospect of any injury,¹⁰ no injunction will be granted. No mandatory injunction will be granted if the nuisance is only constructive.¹¹

Where a right to injunction is proved, it should be granted as a rule and without regard to any difficulty or expense that the defendant may be put to in removing the nuisance. But in exceptional cases where such difficulty is considerable, the Court may suspend the operation of the injunction.¹²

8. "Such other relief." — In England a private individual may join the Attorney-General in the action and claim special damages which he suffered by the nuisance.¹ It is doubtful whether persons suing under this Section, can claim such special damages.

Thus the Section does not control or restrict the provisions of O. 1 R. 8 under which a person may sue on behalf of others.¹

1. Legislative changes. — This Section has been enacted in substitution of Section 539 of the Code of 1882 and has introduced the following changes —

- (a) The words "public purposes of a charitable or religious nature" have been introduced in place of the words "public charitable and religious purposes." See Note 5 below.
- (b) Under the old Code, the interest of the plaintiff was required to be a "direct interest" in the suit. The word "direct" has been deleted by Act VII of 1888.¹ See Note 8 below.
- (c) The words "whether contentious or not" are new. See Note 32 below.
- (d) The words "in the principal Court of original jurisdiction" have been substituted for the words "in the High Court or the District Court" and the words "or any other Court empowered in that behalf by the Local Government" have been newly added. See Note 38 below.
- (e) Clause (a) is new. See Note 15 below.
- (f) Clause (d) is also new. See Note 18 below.
- (g) The following words in clause (e), namely, "what proportion of the trust property or of the interest therein shall be allocated to any particular object of the trust" have been substituted for the words "the proportion in which its objects are entitled." See Note 19 below.
- (h) Sub-section (2) is also new. See Note 33 and Note 41 below.

2. Applicability, object and scope of the Section. — This Section may be taken as intended to confer upon the Courts in this country the same powers as the English Courts of Chancery possessed, in matters relating to the administration of public charities, religious or otherwise.¹ It has been intended to be an exhaustive statement of the law applicable to cases in which there has been a breach of trust in relation to a public trust (whether express or constructive) of a charitable or religious nature.² The aim of the Section is to protect the rights of the public in such trusts and to enable the public, the Advocate-General and Courts of Justice to stop the misuse of the income of charitable institutions.³ This Section is intended to provide proceedings of a special nature for the purpose of determining questions that relate to the administration of public, religious or charitable trusts and to prevent multifarious Sections 92 and 93 have no application as regards Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams. See the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams Act (Madras Act XIX of 1933), Section 44 (2).

When all the above conditions are satisfied, the suit will be governed by the Section and cannot be instituted except in conformity with the procedure prescribed thereby.¹⁴ When any one of the conditions is absent, the Section has no application. The necessity of obtaining the sanction of the Advocate-General, in a suit falling within the Section, has been imposed with a view "to prevent an indefinite number of reckless and harassing suits being brought against trustees by different persons interested in the trust."¹⁵

The mere fact that a suit relates to a public trust or to the properties belonging thereto, without satisfying all the conditions of the Section, will not make the Section applicable thereto.¹⁶ Nor will a suit which satisfied all the conditions of the Section be taken out of its scope merely by the fact that claims for reliefs other than those described in the Section are also added therein.¹⁷ A suit for removal from religious office, if the office is connected with the management of trust funds and properties, is within the scope of the Section.¹⁸ The aim of the Section being to restrict the powers of individuals from having unrestricted access to Courts in the matters described in the Section, its provisions must be strictly construed.¹⁹ Where therefore a point is taken that a suit brought in the ordinary manner is really governed by the provisions of this Section, the Court must see whether it is really and strictly within the four corners thereof.²⁰

Section 9 of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (XIV of 1920) provides that if a suit under this Section is pending or a scheme has been settled, no petition under the provisions of that Act shall be entertained. Section 10 of the same Act also empowers the Court, in suits under this Section, to direct the defendant to furnish security or deposit money for costs of the plaintiff. Where an order under Section 5 of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act is not complied with, there is a breach of trust and by virtue of Section 6 of the Act a suit for any of the reliefs mentioned in this Section so far as it is based on such failure may be instituted without the previous sanction of the Advocate-General.²¹

Section 73 of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act provides that this Section (i. e., Section 92) shall have no application to any suit claiming any relief in respect of the administration or management of a religious endowment and that no suit in respect of such administration or management shall be instituted except as provided by that Act. The effect of Section 73 of that Act is that a suit which could only be instituted by the Advocate-General or by some persons with his consent under this Section must, when it relates to religious endowments governed by that Act, be instituted by the Religious Endowments Board or by some person having an interest and with the consent of the Board.²² See also the undermentioned cases²³ under that Act.

Under Section 192 (a) of the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), the provisions of this Section corresponding to Section 539, Chap. XL of the old Code, have been made inapplicable to proceedings under the said Act.

3. Retrospective operation of the Section. — It is a general principle of law that alterations in procedure are always retrospective in operation, and accordingly there is nothing to prevent Section 92 of the Code from operating retrospectively.¹ This Section deals with the right of suit (which is a substantive right), as well as with procedure.² In so far, therefore, as it affects rights of suit, it will not have a retrospective operation, but will have such operation so far as it affects procedure.³

4. Analogous law — Comparison with the Religious Endowments Act, 1863 and with Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877. — Section 539 of the old Code, corresponding to Section 92 of this Code, was an imperfect reproduction of Lord Romilly's Act (52 Geo. III, C. 101) and the Trustee Act (13 & 14 Vict., C. 60) of 1850 in England. There is a conflict of opinion as to whether decisions on Romilly's Act could be referred to for interpreting the provisions of this Section, some holding that they could be so referred to¹ and others that they could not.² The language of those Acts, however, is materially different from that of the Code³ with this additional difference in procedure that the remedy under the English Act is by way of an *application*⁴ and the proceedings are regarded as summary ones,⁵ whereas under the Code the remedy is by way of a suit, and the proceedings are not summary.⁶

Before the year 1863, the general superintendence of all religious and charitable endowments in the Provinces of Bengal and Madras was vested in the respective Boards of Revenue of those Provinces by virtue of two Regulations, viz., Bengal Regulation XIX of 1810 and Madras Regulation VII of 1817.⁷ But there was no law of Religious Endowments as such applicable to the whole of India.

In the year 1863, the Government wanted to divest themselves of their powers of interference with religious endowments and accordingly Act XX of 1863 was passed, whereby the provisions of the said Regulations relating to religious endowments were repealed and provision was made to transfer all such endowments to trustees and committees.⁸ The operation of the Act was, however, not confined to such endowments only as had been actually taken under the management of the Board of Revenue.⁹ The Act does not apply to the Presidency of Bombay excepting the District of North Canara, nor to any Presidency Towns.¹⁰

As regards charitable endowments, the power of superintendence continued to remain in the Board of Revenue, under the old Regulations, and is still retained by it.

Comparison with Religious Endowments Act. — Section 14 of the Religious Endowments Act provides that any person or *persons interested*¹¹ in any public religious trust¹² may sue the trustee, manager, superintendent or a member of any committee appointed under the Act, for any misfeasance, breach of trust or neglect of duty committed by him in respect of the trust¹³ and the Court may, in such a suit —

- (1) direct the specific performance of any act by such trustee, manager, superintendent or member of the committee;
- (2) decree damages and costs against such person, and
- (3) direct his removal.¹⁴

Section 92 declares that the provisions of the Religious Endowments Act for the institution of suits governed by that Act are not affected by its provisions.¹⁵

Section 92 read with the provisions of the Religious Endowments Act thus leads to the following result —

- (1) Suits in respect of charitable trusts are outside the scope of the Religious Endowments Act (XX of 1863). They will fall within the scope of Section 92 if the conditions for the applicability of the Section described in Note 2 above are satisfied.
- (2) Suits, in respect of religious endowments, which do not charge the trustee, manager, superintendent or committee member with misfeasance, breach of trust or neglect of duty, are outside the scope of the Act. They will fall within the scope of Section 92 if the conditions for its applicability are satisfied.¹⁶

- (3) Suits in respect of public religious trusts which charge the trustee, manager, superintendent or committee member with misfeasance, breach of trust or neglect of duty will fall within the scope of both the said Act and Section 92 of the Code. In such a case, the plaintiff may proceed under either provision at his choice,¹⁷ though the proper machinery to proceed under would, in the generality of cases, be under the Code.¹⁸
- (4) Both under the Act as well as under Section 92, permission is necessary to be obtained before the institution of the suit—if, under the Act, from the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction, and if under Section 92, from the Collector or the Advocate-General.¹⁹
- (5) The general procedure of the Code equally applies to suits under the Act.²⁰
- (6) The reliefs granted under the Act are slightly different from those accorded under Section 92 of the Code.²¹
- (7) A suit under the Religious Endowments Act is as much a representative suit as one under Section 92 of the Code and affects the rights of all those interested in the trust.²²

Comparison with Specific Relief Act, Section 42. — Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act provides that no Court shall grant a declaration where the plaintiff being able to seek further relief, omits to do so. But this Section has been held to be inapplicable to cases falling within the scope of Section 539 (the corresponding Section of the old Code), or Section 92 even if the suit is one for a mere declaration and the plaintiff does not ask for further relief, being able to do so.²³ Nor can a plaintiff evade the requirements of Section 92 by framing a suit as one under Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.²⁴ trust is a question of fact to be determined by a reference to the terms of the document of dedication where there is one,¹⁸ or, where there is no document or the terms thereof are ambiguous,¹⁹ to the user,²⁰ treatment,²¹ *surrounding circumstances*²² and also the feelings and sentiments of the religious community to which the parties belong.²³ The mere fact that the owner of a land built a temple on it and planted a grove thereon,²⁴ or the fact that a person was spending a large portion of his income from a certain property on a temple founded by him,²⁵ or the mere fact that the public worshipped there,²⁶ is insufficient by itself to establish a dedication. But these facts may be some evidence and may be considered in gathering the intention of the founder.²⁷

In order that the dedication might be a valid one, it is essential that its objects and purposes should not be *vague*²⁸ or opposed to law. Under the Mahomedan law, a

waqf or trust for public or charitable purposes is not valid unless express provision is made for the ultimate devolution of the waqf property to *charitable or religious purposes*²⁹ and unless the dedication is a substantial and not merely an illusory one.³⁰ The mere fact that some provision is made for the maintenance of the grantor's kindred and descendants will not render the waqf invalid.³¹ A dedication will not also be invalid merely because it offends the rule against perpetuities³² or because it is in favour of a nonsentient being like an idol.³³

The devolution of the trust upon the death or default of the trustee depends upon the terms on which it was created or, in the absence thereof, upon the usages of the particular trust.³⁴ One of the accepted rules is that the office of the shebait of an idol is vested in the heirs of the founder in default of evidence that he has disposed of it.³⁵ Again, a person who has founded a temple, whether out of his own funds or out of funds collected by subscriptions, can, in the absence of any prohibition by the subscribers, direct in what manner the trust is to be managed, whether hereditarily or otherwise.³⁶ In cases of dedication of the completest character to a Hindu idol, the idol is regarded as a juridical person capable of holding property, but in dedications of every kind the possession and management still belongs to the trustees or shebait in whom is vested the right to sue for the protection of the property.³⁷

As has been seen already in Note 2 above, a trust, for the purposes of Section 92, may be either express or constructive. The words "express or constructive trust" are not limited to the meaning of the word "trust" as used in English law³⁸ but should be construed liberally and in a sense as favourable as possible to the assumption of jurisdiction by a Court under Section 92.³⁹ A "constructive trustee" would include a trustee de son tort who has without title taken upon himself the character of a trustee.⁴⁰ It would also include a person, who, though not a trustee de son tort, holds a fiduciary position whose obligation in such capacity can be enforced in a Court of law.⁴¹

The question whether the head of a mutt holds the mutt properties as a life tenant or as a trustee must depend upon the conditions on which they were given or which may be inferred from usage and treatment.⁴² It has been held that he is not a "trustee" in the English sense of the term⁴³ but is answerable as a trustee for his administration.⁴⁴ Section 92 has accordingly been applied to the case of mutts also.⁴⁵ The acharya of a temple can be sued under Section 92 as a constructive trustee as his fiduciary position is that of a custodian of property held for public purposes.⁴⁶ Similarly, the manager of a temple, as administrator of the temple properties, is a constructive trustee within the meaning of the Section.⁴⁷ It may be noted at this stage that the mere fact that the defendant does not admit the trust but claims to be the owner of the trust properties, will not take the suit out of the scope of the Section.⁴⁸ Nor will a suit, in which the defendant claims under a trust, be taken out of the Section merely because the plaintiffs challenge the appointment of the defendant as a trustee.⁴⁹

The words "where the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust," must be interpreted as meaning "where the Court has to give direction in the nature of framing a scheme or otherwise for the administration of trust."⁷ The mere appointment of a mutawalli is not such a "direction" as is contemplated by the Section and therefore a suit for the appointment of a mutawalli without anything more is not within the Section.⁸ This Section does not say that the direction of the Court can be asked for, only where there has been a breach of any express or constructive trust. It contemplates cases where the direction of the Court may be necessary even though there has been no such breach of trust.⁹ Thus, a suit for accounts of the trust property and in effect asking for directions as regards the trust funds, is one which falls within the Section.¹⁰

7. Suit must be in a representative capacity on behalf of the public. —

Section 92 applies only where the suit brought is representative in its nature, that is to say, where the suit is brought by two or more persons as representing the general public, in order to secure the proper administration of a public trust.¹ A suit by the whole body of persons authorized to administer a trust or by all the persons interested in the trust is not within the Section.² Again, where a person sues, not to establish the general rights of the public, but to remedy a particular infringement of his individual right in a public trust, the suit is not within the Section.³ The reason is that the object of the Section is not to determine the conflicting rights of private individuals but to devise the method for fully carrying out the purposes of the trust.⁴

One consideration which is relevant in coming to a conclusion whether an individual right has been infringed is whether, apart from the infringement of the rights of the general body, there is some damage special to the plaintiff in which the other members of the general body are not concerned.⁵ The right of the plaintiff to be *himself a trustee*⁶ or to share in the management of the trust or to see that certain trusts are managed by persons entitled to manage them, are all individual rights, the enforcement of which falls outside the scope of the Section.⁷ The right of a Mahomedan to use and to worship in a mosque has been held to be a private right existing under the Mahomedan law, independently and wholly irrespective of the rights of other worshippers of the mosque,⁸ though in an earlier decision of the Calcutta High Court it was held to the contrary.⁹ The reasoning of the decision has not been followed in later cases and does not seem to be sound.¹⁰

A person having an interest in common with others is not obliged to seek any relief on behalf of all others but may maintain an action for the establishment of his own rights.¹¹ While so suing for the establishment of his private rights, he cannot, at the same time, be regarded as suing in the alternative, on behalf of others also similarly interested.¹² Where a person whose individual rights are affected sues a trustee for reliefs specified in the Section, the suit will nevertheless not be governed by the Section inasmuch as it is not a representative suit on behalf of the public but is one in enforcement of his own rights.¹³ Thus, one trustee suing his co-trustee for accounts sues only in his individual capacity and the suit will, consequently, be outside the scope of the Section.¹⁴ The Bombay High Court has, however, held that such a suit is within Section 92 and cannot be instituted without the sanction of the Advocate-General.¹⁵ Their Lordships base their conclusion on the ground that the reliefs claimed being within the Section, the suit cannot be brought except in conformity with it. They do not advert to the principle that a suit must be a representative one also before the Section is made applicable thereto. In this view the conclusions of the Bombay High Court do not seem to be sound. The Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has held, accepting the principle abovementioned, that a trustee suing his co-trustee for accounts cannot be held to be suing on the basis of an infringement of individual rights and so the Section will apply.¹⁶ The Allahabad High Court has, in an obiter dictum, doubted whether, when a relief claimed falls within the Section, there is any distinction between the enforcement of public rights and of private rights.¹⁷

It has been held by the Madras High Court that the mere fact that the plaintiffs in a suit are trustees will not necessarily preclude the application of the Section if the reliefs sought relate not to the personal rights of the trustees but to the advancement of the interests of the institution itself by securing more efficient management.¹⁸

18. ('85) AIR 1985 All 111 (113). (A suit the avowed object of which is the furtherance of the interests of the institution itself is a suit falling under Section 92.)

Where a trustee of a public charitable trust dies leaving behind him a widow as trustee and a next reversioner who would be in due course entitled to the management of the trust brings a suit against the widow alleging waste and mismanagement and prays for the appointment of a receiver for the management and preservation of the properties, the suit is not for the protection of his own individual or personal rights. The plaintiff is not in the position of a co-trustee because even in respect of the private properties of the deceased male holder, the position of the presumptive reversioner is merely that of a person with a spes successionis. The analogy of an action allowed to a Hindu reversioner under the Hindu law to maintain a declaratory suit during the lifetime of the widow cannot be invoked because, as regards trusteeship, there is no difference between a male holder of the office and a female holder of the office. The suit is therefore governed by this Section and must be in conformity with its provisions.¹⁰

8. Who can sue — “Two or more persons having an interest in the trust.” — A suit under this Section can be brought by —

(1) the Advocate-General, or

(2) two or more persons having an interest in the trust, after getting the sanction of the Advocate-General.¹

The first essential for a person other than the Advocate-General, to institute a suit under this Section, is that he should have an interest in the trust. Unless he has this, even the written consent of the Advocate-General will not be of any avail.² The object of this condition is “to prevent people interfering by virtue of the Section, in the administration of charitable trusts merely in the interests of others and without any real interest of their own.”³ The Advocate-General is entitled to intervene at any stage⁴ and is entitled to be heard.⁵

Under the English Law, the plaintiff in a suit of the description mentioned in this Section was required to have direct interest in the trust.⁶ This rule was adopted by the Code of 1877 and re-enacted in Section 539 of the Code of 1882, which thus required the plaintiffs to have a direct interest in the trust.⁷ The limitation of “direct interest” was not thought expedient in India and therefore, by Section 44 of the Civil Procedure Code (Amendment) Act, 1888, the word “direct” was omitted.⁸ The effect of the amendment is to widen the class of persons entitled to institute a suit under this Section.⁹ But the interest required even under this Section as amended must be a clear interest in the particular trust over and above that which men may be said to have by virtue of their religion. It must be a real, substantive and an existing interest and not merely a remote, fictitious or a contingent one,¹⁰ though it need not be a direct interest in the sense that only a beneficiary can institute a suit.¹¹ Whether a person has an interest in a particular trust has to be determined on the facts bearing on the relation of the person to the trust with reference to which the suit is brought.¹² amendment of the plaint by adding other persons as plaintiffs after getting the necessary consent. The Bombay High Court has held that the defect in the institution cannot be so cured.³² Though the Madras High Court holds a contrary opinion,³³ it does not base its decision on any principle but simply purports to follow the previous rulings of that Court. It is submitted that the Madras view is not sound.

Where the Advocate-General having filed a suit at the instance of relators, has not appealed, the relators who were no parties to the suit were held incompetent to appeal on their own account.³⁴ order that the costs should come out of the estate.² Costs of Advocate-General, as between attorney and client, come, as a rule, out of the trust fund,³ so also the cost of the trustee defendants if they are incurred for purposes of administration of the trust, but the taxing officer's order to the contrary will not be set aside by the Court.⁴

15. Removing a trustee — Clause (a). — This clause is new. Under the old Code there was a conflict of opinion as to whether a prayer, in a scheme suit, for the removal of the trustee could be granted by the Court. The Calcutta, Bombay, Allahabad and Lahore High Courts, following earlier decisions of the Madras High Court¹ held that it could be granted, either as coming within the words "such further or other relief" or as being involved in the prayer for the appointment of a new trustee.² Later decisions of the Madras High Court, however, held that such a prayer could not be granted under the Section.³ The conflict is now set at rest by the introduction of this new clause⁴ and a suit for removal of a trustee can now be brought under Section 92 even if the plaintiffs challenge the appointment of the defendant as a trustee.⁵

There has been a difference of opinion as to whether a suit by some trustees, for a declaration that the appointment of the defendant as a co-trustee is invalid and for an injunction restraining him from interfering with his management, is a suit for the removal of a trustee falling within this Section. The Madras and Patna High Courts held that the case may be regarded as one in which the direction of the Court is necessary for the administration of the trust, and the relief claimed, cognate to the removal of a trustee, and that, therefore, the suit is governed by this Section.⁶ The Bombay High Court, on the other hand, holds that the mere fact that it resembles a suit for the removal of a trustee will not make the Section applicable. The suit must be clearly one within the Section and must be based on a breach of trust or on the necessity of the direction of the Court being given for the administration of the trust.⁷ The guiding principle in granting or refusing a prayer for the removal of a trustee under this Section is to see whether in the particular case, it is for the welfare of the trust to do so,⁸ having regard to the original purposes of the trust.⁹ The primary duty of the Court is to consider the interests of the public or that part of the public for whose benefit the trust was created.¹⁰ Every mistake, neglect of duty or inaccuracy of conduct is not necessarily a ground for removal.¹¹ Nor is even misconduct on the part of the trustee such a ground unless it is for the benefit of the trust to remove him.¹² On the other hand, a Court can always remove a trustee under this Section even in the absence of proof of misconduct or misappropriation if it is in the interests of the trust to do so.¹³

The following grounds have been held sufficient, in order the removal of a trustee in the interests of the trust —

- (1) Trustee, asserting a hostile title in himself to the trust properties or alienating the same¹⁴ or claiming a right to utilise the income for his own purposes.¹⁵ A mere assertion, however, that the trust properties are his private properties is not a sufficient ground for his removal unless his attitude is unreasonable or malafide, and amounting to a breach of trust.¹⁶
- (2) Trustee who is guilty of a breach of trust or misappropriation of the trust funds¹⁷ or who has concurred in a breach of trust.¹⁸
- (3) falsification of accounts.¹⁹
- (4) Trustee being guilty of wanton waste and neglect of duty.²⁰
- (5) Lack of capacity to manage.²¹

Where, in a suit by one trustee under this Section for removal of another co-trustee the latter charges the plaintiff himself as being guilty of misconduct, the Court can go into the question and if necessary remove the plaintiff himself from the trusteeship.²²

The High Court of Madras has held that the right to pray for the removal of a trustee does not, however, carry with it the right to possession of the lands attached to the trust.²³ But the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur has held that, in a suit under this Section for the removal of a trustee, a decree for delivery of possession of the trust properties to the new trustee could be granted.²⁴

It was held by the Bombay High Court that where the Court frames a scheme in a suit under this Section, it is desirable to provide therein for the removal of the trustees for breaches of trust, so that the removal of the trustee, in case of default, may be obtained by way of execution of the decree and without the trouble and expense of a regular suit.²⁵ The said decision has, however, been dissented from by the High Court of Madras²⁶ and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur²⁷ and does not appear to be a sound one in view of the decision in the Privy Council in the undermentioned case.²⁸ In any case, where the scheme does not provide for the removal of the trustee, an application for the removal of the trustee is not the proper procedure but a suit under this Section is necessary.²⁹ Where a scheme provides for the removal of a trustee for unfitness, the power can be exercised in the course of proceedings arising out of the scheme, even though the trustee be found unfit by reason of a breach of trust and a suit under this Section is not necessary.³⁰ Where a hereditary trustee is removed by a decree in a scheme suit, it is not proper to provide in the decree that the descendants of the trustee are for ever debarred from holding the office.³¹

As to whether a sajjadnashin can be removed under this Section, see the undermentioned cases.³²

Where a will creates a trust and the trustees are wrongly called 'executors,' the proper procedure for removal of the trustees is by a suit under this Section and not by a petition under Section 301 of the Succession Act.³³

16. Appointment of a new trustee — Clause (b). — Under this Section, the Court has complete discretion in appointing any person as a trustee and in arranging for the management of the trust.¹ One of the principles to be remembered in exercising the power of appointing a trustee is that no right of inheritance attaches to a religious institution. It is by appointment that one officer succeeds to another and such appointment is made either by the original founder, or by the superintendent of the trust, or falling these, by the ruling power. The appointment of a mutawalli to a waqf is a matter regarding religious usages within the meaning of Regulation XV of 1793 and must be determined with reference to the provisions of the Mahomedan law on the subject. In respect of waqfs created for public purposes of a religious nature, the District Judge may be assumed to have been authorised by virtue of Section 92 to exercise the powers of a Kazi."

The duty of the Court is to appoint the most suitable persons available as trustees whether originally impleaded in the suit or not and, in doing so, it should take into consideration the wishes and rights of the founder, the past history of the institution and the way in which the management was carried out in the past."

Section 539 of the old Code contained the words "new trustees under the trust." And this gave room for arguments that the appointment must be "in conformity with the original constitution of the trust or with the rules in force in respect of it." This argument was however negatived by decisions which accordingly held that it was competent for the Court to appoint new or additional trustees though not in conformity with the original constitution of the trust, if the interests of the trust demand it.⁴ The same view will obviously prevail under the present Code. A Court will, however, refrain from appointing a person declared not fit to be appointed, by the author of the trust.⁵

The words "new trustee" under the Code mean "new trustee in the place of an old one" and therefore the Section applies only when a new trustee is sought to be appointed in the place of an old one and not to a case where there is no mutawalli, and the Court is asked to appoint a mutawalli.⁶ In cases of the latter class the Court can appoint a mutawalli without a suit under the Section and in the exercise of the

19. Declaring what proportion, etc. — Clause (e). — The words "what proportion of the trust property or of the interest therein shall be allocated to any particular object of the trust" have been substituted for the words "the proportion in which its objects are entitled" in order to make the clause more clear.

A suit for a declaration as to whether the offerings made to a deity belong to the pujaris exclusively or should be divided between the pujaris and the temple servants and if so what proportion of the offerings should be allocated to the pujaris and the temple servants respectively, is one coming under this clause inasmuch as the suit is in substance one to declare what the trust properties are and for the directions of the Court for the administration of the trust properties.

20. Authorising alienation of trust property — Clause (f). — As has already been seen in Note 16 above, the powers of a Kazi under the Mahomedan law are exercised by the District Judge in the mutasils and where a mutawalli claims permission to execute a lease, it can be granted by the District Judge in the exercise of his powers as Kazi and without any suit for that purpose. It is only where all the essentials for the applicability of the Section are present, that such a permission must be sought for by way of a suit.³

It is a general principle of law that though it is not competent as a rule for a shariat to alienate trust property, yet he will be entitled to do so where it is necessary for the benefit or preservation of the estate or for the purpose of preventing it from hostile or litigious attacks.³ The position of a shariat or head of a mutt is, in fact, that of the manager of an infant heir and where debts are contracted by him for purposes binding on the mutt, a decree will be passed charging the income of the mutt for such debts.⁴ Where the shariat or trustee as such commits trespass and is mulcted in damages against the estate, the debtor property will be liable for it.⁵

Debtor property is not absolutely inalienable but can be alienated for legal necessity. The trustee can create derivative tenures over the trust property conformable to usage⁶ but a permanent lease at a fixed rent for all time cannot be a proper act of management and will be, on the other hand, a breach of duty.⁷

21. Setting a scheme — Clause (g). — The Civil Court which in the British Indian system, has taken the place of the Kazi in the Mahomedan law, has a complete discretion in arranging for the management of a public trust, though "in giving effect to the provisions of this Section and in appointing new trustees and settling a scheme it is entitled to take into consideration, not merely the wishes of the founder so far as they can be ascertained, but also the past history of the institution and the way in which the management has been carried out heretofore, in conjunction with other existing conditions that may have grown up since its foundation." Such conditions would include the existing rights of individuals to the trusteeship of endowment, though the Courts are averse generally to the creation of a hereditary right to the office of a public trustee.⁷

The main thing to be remembered is the welfare and interests of the trust.⁸ The jurisdiction of the Court to frame a scheme is not excluded by the fact that the temple, for which the scheme is to be framed, is subject to a temple committee⁹ or is managed by a caste or section of the public.⁵ It is desirable, however, that it should be framed in such a way as to meet the exigencies of the case without unduly interfering with the powers of the temple committee,⁶ or impairing the authority of the mahant or the duly constituted manager of the institution.⁷

In framing a scheme under the Section, the Court is not restricted to the arrangement contemplated by the author of the trust, though as a general rule, it ought not to depart therefrom except for very strong reasons.⁵ Thus, the Court can provide for the management by co-trustees in rotation or otherwise alter the original scheme in the interests of the institution⁸ such as by providing for new or additional trustees.¹⁰

The ground on which the relief for the settlement of a scheme should be granted does not depend upon any charges against the trustees at all, but upon its being necessary for the welfare of the trust and upon its being conducive to the better management of the trust property.¹¹ When a scheme is working properly, the Court will, in fact, refuse to alter it on the mere allegation of mismanagement and malversation by the trustees.¹² Such a ground is not sufficient for altering the scheme itself, though it may be a ground for removal of the trustees.¹³ Where, however, there is mismanagement and there is a large surplus income unspent,¹⁴ or, where a temple has got temple properties and also kattalas properties (which are in the nature of distinct endowments themselves) and the management and mixing up of the various kattalas is likely to lead to embezzlement, it will be a sufficient ground to seek the aid of the Court in framing a scheme.¹⁵ In fact, in that case, separate schemes should be framed for the temple properties and the kattalas properties.¹⁶

The Court may, and it is desirable that it should, do the following things in framing a scheme :

(1) Give necessary directions with reference to the property of the trust and the income therefrom.¹⁷ A scheme which does not ascertain the income and expenses of the trust is an unsatisfactory scheme.¹⁸

(2) Provide some authority for supervising the administration by the trustees.¹⁹ But a clause empowering the Court to exercise disciplinary jurisdiction over the trustees is invalid as it makes the Court practically the superintendent of the institution.²⁰

(3) Provide that any person interested in addition to the trustee, shall be at liberty to ask the Court by way of application for directions to carry out the scheme.²¹ There is a conflict of opinion as to whether a reservation of a right to a person or persons to ask the Court by way of application for a relief coming within the Section is valid. The High Court of Madras and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur have held that such a reservation is ultra vires inasmuch as such relief can only be granted in a suit under Section 92.²² The High Courts of Calcutta and Patna, on the other hand, appear to be of the opinion that such a reservation is intra vires.²³ There is also a conflict of opinion as to whether a reservation of a right to seek, by way of application, a modification or alteration of the scheme later on is or is not ultra vires. The High Courts of Madras and Rangoon and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind hold that such a reservation is ultra vires as it offends against Section 92 which requires that the remedy should be by way of a suit.²⁴ The High Courts of Bombay and Allahabad have, on the other hand, held a contrary view.²⁵ scheme and hence is not ultra vires, even assuming that a provision for modification would be ultra vires.²⁶

Where a scheme contains a clause reserving liberty to apply for directions to work out the scheme but the persons who are to apply are not specified, the proper persons who can apply under the liberty clause are the parties to the suit, and, in case they are dead or are colluding with the defendants or are negligent in applying, other persons wishing to so apply may be allowed to do so after bringing them on the record under O. 1 R. 10 of the Code.²⁷ Where, however, the persons who are to apply are specified, it is not open to any other person to make an application for directions.²⁸ Where a scheme provides for the modification of the scheme by the Court on the application of parties interested in the institution, (assuming such provision is ultra vires) any person who may have an interest in the institution from time to time, whether or not he is a party or representative of a party to the original litigation, is entitled to make an application for the modification of the scheme.²⁹

Where a compromise decree is passed embodying a scheme whereby certain persons were to be elected trustees subject to confirmation by the High Court, the provision regarding confirmation is not ultra vires.³⁰

A scheme once framed and settled by the Court can be varied by the Court, but only on substantial grounds.³¹ But a suit to establish the private rights of the plaintiff which would, if established, alter the scheme framed, is not maintainable.³²

The authority of the Court to deal with matters arising under the scheme is derived only from the scheme itself, and cannot be exercised independently of it.³³ Thus, where a scheme provides for an application to the Court for necessary directions in the management of the trust, the Court cannot order in execution that the trustee should pay the archakas their salaries.³⁴

A scheme once framed is to be interpreted in all respects as if it were an Act,³⁵ as reasonable a construction as possible being given to it when the provisions are doubtful or defective.³⁶

In Gopal Lal Sett v. Purna Chandra Basak,³⁷ a decision of the Privy Council, the following passage occurs: "... they (their Lordships of the Privy Council) regard the gift as in effect a private trust to which the provisions of Section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure would not apply, and consequently, the establishment of a scheme for its administration as provided by the decree of the High Court is inappropriate."

In Tula Ram v. Trikam Singh,³⁸ the Allahabad High Court also held that a scheme could be formed only if the trust was a public trust.

But, in Bimal Krishna v. Shebaitis of Sri Sri Iswar Radha Ballav,³⁹ the Calcutta High Court held that the Civil Court is competent to entertain a suit the object of which is to have a scheme established for the administration of a private debutter. In this case, the decision of the Privy Council in Gopal Sett v. Purna Chandra Basak was distinguished in the following words :

"It is clear from the facts set out in that judgment (the Privy Council judgment) that in this case (i. e., the Privy Council case), there was no gift to the idols but the property was given to one Udoy who was made a trustee in the legal sense of the word and upon whom were cast certain duties both religious and secular in their nature. He was to perform the worship of a certain idol with the income of a particular property and the remainder of the income was given to three people whose names were given in the will. In a case like this, where a private trust was created not of a purely religious character and the ownership of the property was vested in the trustee in the legal sense of the word, the Court could not possibly frame a scheme for the administration of the trust estate. In a religious endowment, however, where the deity who is a perpetual infant is the legal owner of the property and the shebaitis occupy the position of managers or guardians, the position is different. . . . In India, the Crown is the constitutional protector of all infants and as the deity occupies in law the position of an infant, the shebaitis who represent the deity are entitled to seek the assistance of the Court in case of mismanagement or maladministration of the deity's estate and to have a proper scheme for management framed which would end the disputes amongst the guardians and prevent the debutter estate from being wasted or ruined."

Where a scheme for a private trust has been settled by an award and a decree passed thereon, it cannot be varied or altered by consent of parties where the scheme itself does not provide for such alteration.⁴⁰

Where a public trust has been constituted under a will, it is not necessary that a suit for administration of the estate should first be brought before a scheme could be framed under this Section, except in a case where it is doubtful whether there would be funds sufficient to the charitable bequest.⁴¹

See also Note 15 supra and Note 34 infra.

22. Court's power to apply the Cypres Doctrine.—The provincial Courts had originally no equitable jurisdiction to act on the cypres doctrine in the administration of trusts. Section 539 of the old Code remedied this defect and enabled the Courts to exercise such jurisdiction.¹

The doctrine should receive as extended an application as possible, so as to give effect to the true intent and aim of the donor or founder.² But in order to apply the doctrine, the Court should be satisfied that the original object cannot be carried out in the manner and form intended by the donor.³ Thus, where the objects of the trust are not suited to modern conditions and there is a general charitable intention in the terms of the endowment, the Court is competent to apply the funds of the charity cypres.⁴

Where the original object is impossible of performance or is impracticable in fact or would be impolitic to carry out literally, the doctrine can be applied, although impossibility of performance is not a condition precedent to its applicability.⁵

Again, where the mode indicated by the donor does not exhaust the surplus and the same has accumulated in the hands of the trustees, it will be necessary, in order to prevent waste and embezzlement thereof, to prepare a scheme cypres for the utilization of the fund.⁶

Where grants are made to religious institutions as a general thinks-offering, it is proper and legitimate to apply them cypres to the promotion of knowledge.⁷

A charitable bequest does not lapse into residue on the failure of the object of the bequest, and a Court can execute it cypres unless upon the construction of the will a direction to the contrary can be implied.⁸

23. Sanction of the Advocate-General.—A suit under this Section must be brought with the sanction of the Advocate-General.¹ The object of the sanction is to protect the trust property as well as the trustees from an indefinite number of reckless and harassing suits being brought against the trustees.² A sanction under the Section obviates, in respect of the classes of suits described in the Section, the necessity of following the procedure for a suit brought in a representative capacity under O. 1, R. 8, Civil Procedure Code.³ Under the old Code, it had been held by some decisions that a suit coming within the Section could be instituted without sanction by following the procedure under O. 1 R. 8 of the Code.⁴ The present Section is now clearly imperative, and a suit of the nature specified cannot be instituted except in conformity with the requirements of the Section.⁵

An objection as to want of sanction is one which goes to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the suit and as such cannot, under general principles of law, be waived.⁶

It is only the plaintiffs in the suit under Section 92 that have to obtain the sanction of the Advocate-General. Persons who seek to be made defendants to a scheme suit need not obtain any sanction.⁷

In a suit instituted under Section 92 by persons interested, a Court has power under O. 1 R. 10 to join the Advocate-General as party in order to effectually and finally adjudicate upon the questions relating to the administration of the trust.⁸

24. Nature of and form of consent.—In granting the "consent in writing" required by the Section, the Advocate-General or the Collector has to exercise his judgment and see whether the petitioners have an interest in the trust, whether the trust is one contemplated by the Section, and whether there is a prima facie case of a breach of trust.¹ The fact that the Advocate-General or the Collector originally refused to grant sanction under this Section will not preclude him from subsequently changing his mind on further consideration and granting the sanction.² But a wrong exercise or a non-exercise of judgment is only an irregularity curable under Section 99 of the Code.³

A consent, in order to be a valid one, must be unconditional. A conditional consent is no consent at all for the purposes of the Section.⁴

The Advocate-General or the Collector giving consent under this Section has no jurisdiction to impose any time limit within which the suit is to be brought and if he does so, the condition will not be binding.⁵

There is no particular form in which the consent ought to be given. In the Bombay Presidency it is the practice for the Advocate-General to endorse his consent upon the plaint.⁶ But the consent must be a specific permission to two persons by name. A permission to one person named "and another" is not sufficient.⁷ Where, however, two persons apply for permission and it is granted to one of them by name "and the other applicant," it is a sufficient permission inasmuch as "the other applicant" is clearly ascertainable by name.⁸ This Section does not require that details as regards the names of the proposed defendants and the reliefs should be stated in the order granting the sanction.⁹

A permission granted "to institute a suit under Section 539" is not limited to any particular species of suits mentioned in the Section or in the application for sanction.¹⁰

25. Consent, when necessary—Effect of consent.—The obtaining of a "consent in writing" of the Advocate-General is a condition precedent to a valid institution of a suit under this Section. Where no such consent has been obtained, the suit must be dismissed, and cannot be rectified by any subsequent amendment.¹

The question whether this Section applies to a suit depends on the prayers in the plaint at the date when the suit is instituted and the Section cannot be evaded by an amendment of the plaint at a later date.² Where sanction has been obtained but the suit is otherwise defective and in order to remedy such defect the Court adds other parties who have subsequently obtained sanction, such sanction will relate back to the date of institution.³

Where in a suit instituted with the required sanction the Court adds a new defendant under O. 1 R. 10 in order to effectually and completely adjudicate upon all the questions involved in the suit, but such addition does not alter the nature of the suit, no new sanction need be obtained⁴ nor need it be obtained for transposing a defendant to the array of plaintiffs.⁵ Where such addition or other amendment does alter the nature of the suit, a fresh sanction is necessary.⁶ Thus, an amendment relating to a fresh cause of action involving a fresh addition of parties and fresh reliefs against them requires the sanction of the Advocate-General.⁷ The Calcutta High Court has held in a recent decision⁸ that where a representative suit relating to a trust has been instituted with the consent of the Advocate-General under this Section, no fresh consent is necessary in the case of each fresh addition of a party and that any member of the public who is interested in the trust may come in and carry on the suit or appeal, as the case may be, without obtaining a fresh sanction. Where sanction is given on the basis of a breach of trust and the plaintiffs seek amendment later by giving particulars of the breach of the trust, such amendment does not alter the nature of the suit and no sanction is necessary for such amendment.⁹

Where the addition of a relief which is not sanctioned is made to reliefs which are sanctioned, the suit should not on that ground be dismissed but the portion covered by the sanction should be heard and decided.¹⁰ The said additional prayer may be

General in England.¹ He can himself initiate proceedings as well as grant sanction to others.²

The powers of the Advocate-General under Section 539 of the old Code were conferred on the Collector by a Government Resolution. And, by virtue of Section 157 of this Code, the powers so conferred under the old Code operate under the present Code also.³ The Collector can, in the mufassal, thus exercise the powers of the Advocate-General under this section.⁴

The functions of the Advocate-General or the Collector under this Section cannot be delegated to, or exercised by, others. The reason is (that is the object of empowering them is) that the duties to be discharged by them are of a special nature which require anxious consideration by the very persons empowered. An Assistant Collector discharging the functions of the Collector in certain matters, cannot exercise the power of granting sanction under the Section.⁵ But a sanction granted by the Collector is valid though it is signed by the Sheristadar "by order" of the Collector.⁶

28. Parties to a suit under the Section. — It is a general principle to be remembered in dealing with cases under this Section that the grant of reliefs against third parties is outside the scope of the Section.¹ The reason is two-fold — firstly, the object of the Section is to protect trustees from vexatious and harassing suits and not to protect trespassers and third parties from suits against them;² secondly, a relief against a third party is not one of the reliefs specified in the Section and cannot be brought within the words "such further or other relief" which should be construed ejusdem generis with the preceding clauses, and not as including reliefs wholly outside.³ It follows as a consequence that in a suit under Section 92, no relief such as the recovery of possession, or ejunction or rendition of accounts can be granted against third parties such as trespassers or alienees of the trust properties;⁴ and vice versa a by the Calcutta High Court in the undermentioned case¹⁰ that where a stranger receives property which he knows to be part of the trust estate, he is a constructive trustee and relief against him can be claimed in a suit under this Section.

It would seem to logically follow from the principle that no relief can be granted against third parties under this Section, that such third parties are not necessary or proper parties to the suit. There has, however, been a divergence of opinion on the point, and at least four different views have been expressed —

(a) The Calcutta High Court has held that it is not competent to the Court to implead an alienee at all in the suit.¹¹ The High Court of Rangoon also has held that strangers to the trust are not proper or necessary parties to a suit under this Section and that in such a suit the plaintiffs who have wrongly impleaded third parties cannot pray in aid the provisions of O. I R. 3 or O. I R. 10.¹²

(b) The Madras High Court has held that an alienee cannot be made a party to the suit¹³ against his will but may, if he himself desires it, be made a party.¹⁴ If he is impleaded against his will, the suit should be dismissed against him.¹⁵ Even if he is a party the Court is not bound to decide whether the alienation in his favour is binding on the institution.¹⁶ In a later decision,¹⁷ the Madras High Court has held that an alienee of the trust property though not a necessary party is a proper party to the suit under this Section.

(c) The Allahabad High Court has held that the alienee though not a necessary party¹⁸ is a proper party to the suit¹⁹ and any decree passed in the suit will be binding on him.²⁰

(d) The Bombay High Court has held that the alienee is a necessary party to the suit and that suit could not be decided in his absence. Yet ejectment decree was not passed against him even though he was a party.²¹

It must not, however, be inferred from the above discussion that no suit can be brought against third parties under this Section unless they are trustees de jure or de facto or de son tort. It is only when a relief outside the Section is asked for (such as possession or ejectment) against a third party that it cannot be granted. A suit for a scheme or for the appointment of a new trustee or for directions, can, and sometimes can only be brought against persons in possession of trust property, who either claim the same as their own, or who deny the validity of the trust.²³ Otherwise, it will lead to this, namely, that no suit can be brought under this Section in a case where all the trustees are dead or refuse to act.

Where an alienee is made a party and a declaration is granted against the alienee and the latter appeals therefrom, the trustee is not a necessary party to the appeal as a relief could be granted to the alienee in appeal without the presence of the trustees.²³

Under O. 1 R. 10, a Court can join the Advocate-General as a party to a suit brought by persons interested under S. 92, in order to effectually and finally adjudicate upon the questions relating to the administration of the trust.²⁴ See also the undermen- tioned decision.²⁵

29. Compromise of suit.—In earlier decisions of the Calcutta High Court it was held that as long as the question whether the endowment is a public one or not is still in dispute, or if it is proved that the endowment is a public one, a suit under Section 92 cannot be compromised.¹ This view has been dissented from in a later decision of the same Court. It was there held that O. 23 of the Code does not exclude suits under this Section and that there is nothing in law to prevent the Court from passing a compromise decree.² The Madras High Court has assumed the correctness of this view but holds that a compromise under which any portion of the trust properties is given to a stranger ought not to be sanctioned by the Court.³ See also the case cited below.⁴

30. Abatement of suit.—Before the decision of the Judicial Committee in *Raja Anand Rao v. Ramdas Daduram*¹ there was a conflict of decisions as to whether, where one of the two plaintiffs dies, the suit abates unless some other person who has the necessary interest and who has obtained the required sanction is brought on record in his place. The Allahabad High Court held that it did, while the Madras High Court and the Chief Court of the Punjab held that it did not abate, on the ground that the suit is a representative one instituted on behalf of all the persons interested in the trust, and that the Court could add parties even without their obtaining the sanction of the Advocate-General.² According to the Oudh Judicial trust-deed, entitlements, him to be made a trustee, in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all questions involved in the suit.)

25. (37) AIR 1937 Oudh 229 (232) : 13 Luck 255. (In a suit under S. 92, Civil Procedure Code, for settling a scheme for a trust, it is necessary to implead as a defendant a person who is not merely a beneficiary but is a near relation of the founder of the trust and has got the necessary qualification which, under the terms of the

Commissioner's Court, the necessity for co-operation of two or more persons is confined to the institution of the suit, and therefore when one plaintiff dies, the surviving plaintiff can alone carry on the suit or appeal.⁴

The Judicial Committee, in the abovementioned case, has held that a suit under Section 92 is not prosecuted by individuals for their own interests but as representatives of the general public, and that such a suit does not fail on the death of the parties who originally filed the suit.⁵ The Allahabad view therefore seems to be no longer law.⁶

Where in a suit under this Section against a trustee, the defendant trustee dies, the question whether the suit abates depends upon the relief claimed in the suit. If the relief claimed is solely the removal of the trustee, the suit will, of course, abate. But if, in addition to the removal, other reliefs, such as the framing of a scheme, are prayed for, the suit will not abate but will survive against the successor-in-office of the deceased defendant.⁷

31. Suit, if can be brought in forma pauperis.—The provisions of O. 33 of the Code could not have been intended by the Legislature to be combined with those of Section 92 and therefore a suit under Section 92 cannot be instituted in forma pauperis especially when the plaintiffs' intention to sue as paupers was not brought to the notice of the Advocate-General before granting sanction.¹

32. Suit under the Section need not be contentious.—Section 539 of the old Code did not contain the words "whether contentious or not" but it was nevertheless held by the Calcutta and Madras High Courts that a suit under that Section need not be contentious.² The said words have been now introduced in the present Section in order to give effect to those decisions and to make the Section clearer.

33. Section is mandatory — Sub-section (2).—Under the Code of 1859 there were no special provisions for the institution of suits relating to public charities. Suits, therefore, relating to such matters could under that Code be brought in the ordinary Courts by certain persons as plaintiffs. For instance, persons who were appointed to supervise over trustees could sue for their removal for misconduct, in the time—Court can permit parties to proceed with suit or appeal against remaining parties—Provisions of O. 22, Civil P. C., cannot be made applicable to suits or appeals in representative capacity under Section 92, or O. 1 R. 8 of the Code.]

(Parties permitted by Court to sue or to be sued in representative capacity — Death of some parties during pendency of suit or appeal—Suit or appeal does not abate by failure to bring on record the legal representatives of such persons, within ordinary Courts¹ and members of a community could, under Section 30 (O. 1 R. 8 of the Code), bring a representative suit also in the ordinary Courts for declarations, etc., with reference to the trust.² Section 539 was introduced for the first time by the Code of 1877 and was repeated in the Code of 1882, but there was no provision therein corresponding to sub-section (2) of the present Section. (Section 539 of the Code of 1877, moreover, did not apply to religious trusts or to trusts which were religious as well as charitable.³)

There was consequently a conflict of opinion whether Section 539 was mandatory or whether it was merely a directory and an enabling provision, having no restrictive effect on any independent rights of suit.⁴ It was with a view to settle this conflict that the Legislature introduced sub-section (2) of the present Section, clearly removing the classes of suits specified therein from the cognizance of ordinary Courts, and constituting a special tribunal for the trial thereof.⁵ The cases before 1908, therefore, holding that the Section was only an enabling one which did not bar independent rights of suit, in regard to the reliefs specified in the Section, are no longer good law.⁶

In considering if the Section is applicable, it is not merely the right of the plaintiff that must be looked into but also the nature of the relief claimed and if that is one specified in the Section the direction laid down in the sub-section (2) must be obeyed.⁷ Thus, a District Judge cannot order the suspension or removal of a mahant on a mere report instead of in a suit as required by this Section.⁸ A suit does not cease to be one under Section 92 and subject to its mandatory provisions simply because reliefs not within the Section are claimed in addition to reliefs within the Section.⁹ And conversely, the fact that some of the reliefs asked for in the plaint cannot be granted on account of the absence of the consent in writing of the Advocate-General, would not disentitle the plaintiff to the other reliefs.¹⁰

The sub-section which speaks of a suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub-section 1 must be read with the latter sub-section and if it is so read, it follows that it is not every suit in which any of the reliefs specified in sub-section 1 is claimed

A District Court in which a suit could not have been instituted as being not one within the Section¹⁰ or a Sub-Judge finding that necessary sanction has not been obtained,¹¹ should return the plaint and not dismiss the suit.

An application for the modification of a scheme framed by the District Court and confirmed by the High Court can be entertained only by the High Court but the District Court can give such directions as may be necessary to carry out the modified scheme.¹²

The Court of a Subordinate Judge is not disentitled or debarred from entertaining a suit for the administration of the estate of a deceased testator, simply because the will contains directions for applying some portion of the estate for charitable purposes. But he may appoint a receiver in respect of such properties until directions thereto are obtained by the Advocate-General or the Collector from the District Court.¹³

Section 92 does not confer on the High Court powers to entertain suits in its original jurisdiction, in respect of charities in the mufassil.¹⁴

The District Court has no power to transfer to a Subordinate Court a suit under this Section instituted before itself.¹⁵ (See Note 11 to Section 24 ante.)

39. Valuation of suit.—The reliefs claimed in a suit under Section 92 are incapable of valuation and are therefore chargeable under Article 17 clause (6) of the Court-Fees Act, 1870.¹ Even a prayer for possession or for a declaration and consequential relief under this Section will not take it out of the operation of Article 17 clause (6) of the Court-Fees Act and bring the same under Section 7 of the said Act.² The reason is that the plaintiffs in a suit under Section 92 do not claim the reliefs for their own advantage but as representing the public.³ The Bombay High Court has held that where in addition to the reliefs claimed under Section 92, a relief for an account is also asked for, the suit is chargeable with a court-fee under Section 7 (iv) (f) of the Court-Fees Act.⁴ This view, being opposed to the opinion of all the other High Courts, does not seem to be a sound one.

A suit of the nature specified, filed in the High Court, is not exempt from court-fees on the ground that the court-fees payable under the schedules thereto have no application to suits filed in the ordinary jurisdiction of the High Court, but will have to be taxed under the High Court-fees Rules of that Court.⁵

It may be noted in this connection that the Madras Court-fees (Amendment) Act of 1912 specifically provides in Schedule II Article 17 (iii) for a suit under Section 92 of the Code, charging a fixed fee of Rs. 50 therefor.

40. Limitation.—The cause of action for a suit under Section 92 occurs with every breach of trust or whenever the direction of the Court is necessary.¹ The period of limitation, however, depends upon the question whether the trustee is an express trustee or trustee de son tort. In the former case, if the suit is for following trust property in the hands of the trustee or his representative, there is no period of limitation and the suit is not barred by any length of time under Section 10 of the Limitation Act. In the latter case, however, the suit will be governed by Article 120 of the Act. In a suit, therefore, for accounts under this Section against trustee de son tort, the defendant is liable to render accounts only for six years preceding the suit.² The Calcutta High Court has, on the other hand, held that a trustee de son tort stands in the same position as an express trustee for the purposes of limitation.³ This view, it is submitted, is contrary to the general consensus of decisions and cannot be supported.⁴

Where the de jure trustees of a trust lose their right against the de facto trustees by limitation, that fact will not confer on the de facto trustees immunity from a suit by the Advocate-General under this Section.⁵ Section 5 of the Limitation Act will apply to appeals in scheme suits also. Where a scheme suit is dismissed and on the plaintiffs appealing therefrom, the appeal is returned to them for re-presentation but is not re-presented by them in time malà fide, other persons interested can re-present it after the time fixed and claim that the delay should be excused under Section 5 of the Limitation Act.⁶

41. Decision under the Section, whether operates as res judicata.— A decree passed in a suit under Section 92 is binding not only on the trust and the trustee but also on all worshippers of the temple.¹ The reason is that a suit under Section 92 is a representative one, the plaintiffs representing all persons interested in the trust.² The actual parties to the suit will also be bound by the decree. Thus the transferee of trust property, who is made a party to the suit is debarred from going behind it in any subsequent suit.³ Where, however, the suit is fraudulently withdrawn, it cannot operate as res judicata.⁴

Again, when a suit under Section 92 ceases to be a representative one, it ceases also to be binding except on the actual parties thereto. Thus, where a suit filed with sanction was amended by adding strangers and claiming reliefs not covered by the sanction, the suit ceases to be a representative one and cannot bind the public.⁵ A previous litigation in a private capacity is not res judicata in a subsequent suit in a public capacity under this Section.⁶

Synopsis

1. May be exercised by the Collector.
2. Or by such officer as the Provincial Government may appoint.
3. Visitorial powers of the Collector.
4. Previous sanction of the Provincial Government.

1. May be exercised by the Collector. — The Collector cannot delegate his functions to any one else.¹ Where the Collector refuses to give the sanction it may be granted by the Advocate-General.²

2. Or by such officer as the Provincial Government may appoint. — For a list of such officers, see the foot-note below.³

3. Visitorial powers of the Collector. — See Note 4 to Section 92 and the undermentioned case.⁴

4. Previous sanction of the Provincial Government. — The Section provides for two distinct matters: (1) the appointment of an officer to exercise the powers conferred by Sections 91 and 92 on the Advocate-General, and (2) the grant of "previous sanction" by the Provincial Government to the exercise of such powers. Both the appointment and the previous sanction must exist before Section 93 can be applied.⁵ Accordingly a suit instituted without such previous sanction is liable to be dismissed.⁶ The fact that the Provincial Government has appointed an officer under this Section generally is no bar to its appointing the Collector or any other person to exercise such powers in any particular case.⁷

After the decision of the Privy Council in *Prem Narain's case*⁴ referred to above, the Public Suits Validation Act (XI of 1932) has been passed whereby —

(1) the institution of suits pending at the commencement of the Act is not to be deemed to be invalid by reason of the "previous sanction" not having been obtained as required by this Section;

(2) suits dismissed after the 30th day of November 1931 (the date of the decision in Prem Narain's case) and before the commencement of the Act, solely on the ground of want of such previous sanction are to be restored to file on an application made therefor within six months from the commencement of the Act; and

(3) appeals dismissed between the said dates on the said ground, are to be re-tried on an application made therefor within six months from the commencement of the Act.

See also the undermentioned cases.⁵

And in cases where the suit is pending on the date of the passing of the above-mentioned Act, it is not necessary for the plaintiffs to obtain sanction from the Provincial Government during the pendency of the suit.⁶

Where a suit was brought with the permission of the Collector but without the sanction of the Provincial Government and a decree was passed in such suit before the decision of the Privy Council in Prem Narain's case, it was held that the decree was not a nullity for want of jurisdiction.⁷

Where a suit is restored under the Public Suits Validation Act of 1932, the suit must be proceeded with and tried in accordance with law. The suit cannot be again dismissed on the ground that there has been no valid consent given by the Collector.⁸

[New.] In order to prevent the ends of justice from being defeated the Court may, if it is so prescribed,— Supplemental proceedings.

- (a) issue a warrant to arrest the defendant and bring him before the Court to show cause why he should not give security for his appearance, and if he fails to comply with any order for security commit him to the civil prison;
- (b) direct the defendant to furnish security to produce any property belonging to him and to place the same at the disposal of the Court or order the attachment of any property;
- (c) grant a temporary injunction and in case of disobedience commit the person guilty thereof to the civil prison and order that his property be attached and sold;
- (d) appoint a receiver of any property and enforce the performance of his duties by attaching and selling his property;
- (e) make such other interlocutory orders as may appear to the Court to be just and convenient.

1. Scope of the Section. — This is a leading provision summing up the general powers of the Courts in regard to the various kinds of interlocutory orders. The details of procedure have been relegated to the rules.¹ By virtue of Section 7 ante, clauses (c) and (e) of the Section do not extend to Provincial Small Cause Courts.²

Section 94 — Note 1

1. See Notes on Clauses.
2. ('19) AIR 1919 Cal 6 (6) : 46 Cal 717.

2. "If it is so prescribed."—"Prescribed" means prescribed by rules. See Section 2 clause 16. It has been held by the High Court of Madras that the Courts shall have power to pass the orders referred to in clauses (a) to (e) of the Section only if it is so prescribed by the rules and that this would exclude the inherent power of the Court under Section 151 to pass such orders where they are not prescribed by rules.¹ The Lahore High Court has, on the other hand, taken the view that the Court has an inherent power to act ex debito justitiae even in cases not prescribed by rules.² The High Court of Patna and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind have taken the same view as the Lahore High Court.³ The High Court of Allahabad seems to be of the same view as that of the Madras High Court.⁴ In a case before the Bombay High Court a person brought a suit under O. 21 R. 103 and applied for an injunction restraining the defendant from taking possession of the property pending disposal of the suit. The injunction was refused on the ground that the provisions of Rules 1 and 2 of Order 39 did not apply.⁵ No question, however, of inherent jurisdiction was either advanced or considered in the case. See also Notes 3 and 22 to O. 39 R. 1.

3. Warrant of arrest—Clause (a).—See Order 38.

4. Order for security or attachment—Clause (b).—See Order 38.

5. Temporary injunction—Clause (c).—The applicant for an injunction must make out a prima facie case therefor.¹ A mere apprehension of interference with the plaintiff's collection of rent and of the breach of the peace does not justify the grant of an injunction.² Nor will the Court exercise a proper discretion in granting an injunction restraining the opposite party from the bona fide exercise of his statutory rights.³ Order 39 must be read with this clause. O. 39 R. 2 (3), empowering the Court to punish a party for disobedience of an injunction is not confined to suits of the nature specified in O. 39 R. 2 but applies to disobedience generally of an injunction granted by the Court whether under Order 39 or under Section 94.⁴

An injunction cannot be issued by one Court to another Court.⁵
For a fuller discussion of the subject, see O. 39 Rr. 1 and 2.

1. Legislative changes. — This Section amalgamates and corresponds to

Ss. 491 and 497 in the Code of 1882. The material changes introduced are —
(a) The words "by its order" have been substituted for the words "in its decree" thereby showing that the order for compensation must be separately made and must not be embodied in the decree, as was required under the old Code.¹

(b) The words "order determining any such application" in sub-section (2) have been substituted for the words "award under this Section," making it clear that it is not only when a compensation has been granted under this Section but also when it has been applied for and refused that a suit for compensation is barred. See Note 13 below.

2. Analogous law. — This Section is analogous to Sec. 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code which provides for compensation being awarded to an accused person against whom a frivolous or vexatious complaint is made.¹ But the difference between the two Sections is that while the award of compensation under Section 250, Criminal Procedure Code, is no bar to a suit for compensation, the determination of an application for compensation under Section 95 of the Civil Procedure Code precludes a separate suit for compensation.²

2a. Scope of the Section. — The Section applies also to cases in which the plaintiff is a minor represented by a next friend.¹

The Section applies to arrest or attachment before judgment. There is no corresponding provision in the Code as regards proceedings in execution of a decree.²

3. The arrest or attachment must have been actually effected or the temporary injunction must have been granted. — No compensation is awardable under this Section unless the attachment or arrest has been actually effected.¹ The mere obtaining of an order for attachment or arrest is not enough.² But it is not necessary that the defendant arrested should have received the summons in the suit.³ The Section applies also to temporary attachments under O. 38 R. 5⁴ and a creditor attaching before judgment, goods not belonging to his debtor will be liable in damages to the person to whom the goods belong even though he has acted honestly.⁵

4. The attachment or arrest must have been applied for on insufficient grounds. — The words "on insufficient grounds" must be taken to mean "without reasonable or probable cause."¹ Where in an application for attachment before judgment, the only ground put forward was that unless the attachment was made the plaintiff, in the event of success, would have difficulty in realising the decretal amount, the application is made on insufficient grounds and the defendant is entitled to reasonable compensation.²

Where, as a matter of fact, there have been sufficient grounds for applying for attachment, the mere fact that the grounds have not been mentioned in the application for attachment or arrest before judgment will not make the plaintiff liable for compensation.³

5. "Or the suit of the plaintiff fails." — A defendant in a suit in which an arrest or attachment has been effected or a temporary injunction granted will be entitled to compensation under this Section, if —

(1) the plaintiff's suit fails, and

(2) there was no reasonable or probable ground for instituting it.

It is not necessary to show in such a case that the arrest or attachment was applied for on insufficient grounds. The mere fact that the plaintiff's suit for injunction was dismissed because his conduct had been fraudulent,¹ will not enable the defendant to claim compensation under this Section. The reason is that there was no want of reasonable and probable cause for instituting the suit, the same being dismissed on the ground of plaintiff's fraudulent conduct. Nor will mere evidence of malice prove the absence of reasonable or probable ground for instituting the suit.²

6. Procedure for obtaining compensation under this Section. — An application by the defendant is necessary for obtaining compensation under it. Beyond this there is no particular procedure or formality to be followed.¹ But it is conceived that the application is to be made only after the suit is heard and not before.² See also Note 1 above. Further, an application for compensation for wrongful attachment of property cannot be entertained by the Court before the order of attachment is set aside.³ It has been held that the Court has power under this Section to permit the conversion of an application for compensation into a suit for compensation upon payment of the necessary court-fees.⁴

7. Amount and basis of compensation. — Under this Section the Court can grant damages only to the extent of Rs. 1,000. There is also a further restriction and that is that it cannot award, as compensation, any sum in excess of its pecuniary jurisdiction.

The grant of compensation under this Section is a matter of discretion and the discretion has to be exercised in a judicial manner. Where a Court gives no reasons for refusing an application under this Section, the order is not one according to law.¹

The Section authorises the award of reasonable compensation to the defendant for the expense and injury caused to him. There is a conflict of decisions as to whether humiliation and loss of prestige will be included in the term 'injury.' The Calcutta High Court has held that such humiliation and loss of prestige will not be included in the term and that no compensation can be awarded under this Section on such grounds,² while the contrary view has been held by the Madras High Court.³

In the case of a suit by a third party for damages for wrongful attachment of his property in execution of a decree passed against another person, it was held by the Privy Council that the wrong was actionable per se and that the plaintiff was entitled to general damages although he did not prove any special damage.⁴

8. Court other than that by which the arrest, etc., was ordered cannot grant compensation.—Under this Section compensation can be awarded only by the Court by which the arrest, etc., was ordered and the application for compensation has to be made only to that Court.¹

9. Provincial Small Cause Court.—A Provincial Small Cause Court can neither order the attachment of immovable property nor award compensation under this Section for any such attachment.¹ But it can order the attachment of movables and also award compensation for a wrongful attachment thereof under this Section.² A suit for damages for illegal attachment is not cognizable by a Small Cause Court.³ See also Section 7 (b) (1) and Order 38 Rule 13.

10. Undertaking, effect of.—Where a temporary injunction restraining the defendant from executing a decree obtained by him in another suit is granted on an undertaking by the plaintiff to compensate the defendant for the loss that he may suffer on account of such injunction, and the suit of the plaintiff is dismissed, the undertaking is to be enforced not by application to the Court executing the defendant's decree but to the Court which granted the injunction.¹

11. Chartered High Court, power of.—The question as to the applicability of Section 95 to suits entertained by a Chartered High Court on its original side has arisen in Bombay and the view expressed in the latest decision of that Court on the point is that the Section does not apply to such suits and that hence the High Court can on an application by the defendant award under Rule 329 of the Bombay High Court Original Side Rules, compensation exceeding Rs. 1,000 for wrongful attachment before judgment.¹ But a different view was taken in an earlier decision of the same High Court.²

12. Counter-claim for compensation as defence to suit.—In a summary suit on a negotiable instrument under Order 37, a defendant who has been arrested before judgment and who claims compensation for such arrest, can, on that ground, apply for leave to defend the suit.¹

13. Regular suit, if and when barred.—It has been seen in Section 9 *ante*¹ that, as a general principle, where two proceedings or two remedies are provided by law, one of them must not be taken as operating in derogation of the other.² It has also been seen³ that a regular suit, according to the general principle, will not be barred by a summary and concurrent remedy being also provided therefor, but that if a party has elected to pursue his remedy under one provision, he is bound by it and cannot on his failing therein proceed under the other provision.

Applying these principles, it follows that a regular suit for compensation is not barred by the omission to proceed under the summary procedure provided for by this Section⁴ but that if an application is made and disposed of under this Section such disposal would operate as a bar to a regular suit, whatever may be the result of the application.⁵ A claim for compensation made in a counter affidavit against a petition for attachment before judgment is not an application for compensation required by Section 95 and cannot bar a regular suit.⁶ The suit barred under this Section and the application barred under this Section must be ejusdem generis with the same cause of action. Thus, an application under this Section is no bar to a subsequent suit for damages caused by reaping and removal of crop from the land, which the plaintiff was prevented from entering by the Court's injunction.⁷

There is, however, a difference between the conditions necessary for the maintainability of an application under this Section, and those necessary for the maintainability of a regular suit. In a suit for compensation the plaintiff must not only prove want of reasonable or probable cause for obtaining the arrest, attachment or injunction, but also that the defendant was actuated by malice.⁸ Malice is not necessarily hatred or enmity, but any improper motive. A plaintiff acts improperly in making use, for putting undue pressure on his debtor, of a process intended to prevent fraudulent conduct on the part of the debtor.⁹ A suit therefore lies for maliciously and wrongfully obtaining a temporary injunction¹⁰ or an excessive attachment of property.¹¹ When property is wrongfully attached and afterwards made away with, in collusion with the attaching officer, it is not necessary for maintaining a suit for compensation that a criminal prosecution should be previously instituted.¹² The mere institution of a malicious civil suit will not give rise to a cause of action for a suit for compensation. When therefore a decree for a perpetual injunction is made by the first Court but is set aside in appeal, the defendant cannot maintain a suit for damages caused by the said suit having been brought.¹³

There is a distinction between cases where the plaintiff in the suit for damages for wrongful attachment was a party to the suit in which the goods were wrongfully attached and cases where he was not such a party. It is only in the former cases that malice and want of reasonable or probable cause is to be proved by the plaintiff. In the latter case a suit will lie even though the attachment may have been made in good faith.¹⁴

14. Limitation.—As to the period of limitation applicable to suits for damages for wrongful attachment of property, see Articles 29, 36 and 49 of the Limitation Act and the undermentioned cases.¹

A suit for damages for wrongfully obtaining a temporary injunction is governed by Article 42 and time runs from the date when the temporary injunction is dissolved by the decree granting perpetual injunction.²

APPEALS

APPEALS FROM ORIGINAL DECREES

96. [S. 540.]¹⁰ (1) Save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code² or by any other law²² for the time being in force, an appeal³ shall lie from every decree passed by any Court exercising original jurisdiction to the Court authorized⁴ to hear appeals from the decisions of such Court.

(2) An appeal may lie from an original decree passed ex parte.¹²

(3) No appeal shall lie from a decree passed by the Court with the consent¹⁵ of parties.

1. Legislative changes. — This Section corresponds to Section 540 of the Code of 1882. Under that Section an appeal lay "from the decrees or from any part of the decrees" so that provisional decrees were also appealable.¹ This was, however, interpreted to mean that the decree or part of the decree should, in order to be appealable, be a decision relating to the disposal of the entire suit.² The words "from the decrees or from every part of the decrees" have now been omitted and the words "from every decree" substituted therefor.
 Sub-section (3) is entirely new and gives legislative sanction to the view that had been held that no appeal lay from a consent decree.³ It corresponds with Section 375 of the Code of 1882 except that certain words which occurred at the end of Section 375 have now been omitted: see Note 15 below.
 It is useful in this connexion to compare Section 49 of the Judicature Act of 1873 which provides that "no order made by the High Court or by any Judge thereof, by consent of parties, shall be subject to any appeal except by leave of the Court or Judge making such order."⁴

2. Scope and object of the Section. — It is a general principle of law that a right of appeal is not a natural or inherent right attaching to litigation.¹ A litigant having a grievance of a civil nature has, independently of any statute, a right to institute a suit in some Court or other unless its cognizance is expressly or impliedly barred.² But a right of appeal does not exist and cannot be assumed unless expressly given by statute or by rules having the force of statute.³ Nor can parties confer a right

Code and the rules contained therein apply to such proceedings save in so far as the Code specially provides to the contrary.¹⁰

By a settled course of practice the procedure in Vice-Admiralty cases is governed by the Code of Civil Procedure.¹¹ This chapter on appeals will also, therefore, it is to be presumed, apply to such cases.

3. "Appeal," meaning of.—The word 'appeal' has not been defined in the Code and has therefore to be construed in its natural and ordinary meaning. It has been held to mean "the removal of a cause from an inferior to a superior Court for the purpose of testing the soundness of the decision of the inferior Court."¹ It is thus a remedy provided by law for getting the decree of the lower Court cancelled² and is, in fact, a complaint made to the higher Court that the decree of the lower Court is unsound and wrong.³

An appeal is not a fresh suit but is only a continuation of the original proceedings and a stage in the suit itself.⁴ The decree passed by the Appellate Court is a decree in the suit⁶ and the appellate stands in the place of the original judgment for all legal purposes.⁶

An appeal differs from a review in that the primary intention of the review is the re-consideration of the subject by the same Judge under certain conditions, while an appeal is a rehearing by another tribunal.⁷

An appeal differs also from a revision. In an appeal the points to be decided are those on which the parties are at variance. But a revision is a matter between a higher Court and a lower Court; in fact revisional powers may, in certain cases, be exercised without an appeal or an application by any of the parties concerned.⁸

The expression "appeal under the Civil Procedure Code" is not restricted to an appeal the right to prefer which is conferred by that Code but means an appeal the procedure in regard to which is governed by the Code.⁹

The use of the words "an appeal" in the Section does not mean "one appeal only." Where an appeal is dismissed for default, a fresh appeal will not be barred if brought within the period of limitation for filing the appeal.¹⁰

An appeal which, even if successful, would be entirely fruitless should be dismissed as being incompetent. Thus, where in execution the Court directed the sale in a particular order and the judgment-debtor appealed but before the appeal was heard the properties were sold, the appeal, even if successful, will become infructuous and should be dismissed.¹¹

4. "Court authorized to hear appeals." — This Section does not deal with jurisdiction of Courts but only with the right of appeal.¹ The jurisdiction to entertain appeals is given by the various Acts in the different Provinces² and it is only that Court to which jurisdiction is so given in any particular matter that can hear the appeal.³

A general rule adopted in the various Acts is that an appeal from a decree or order of a District Judge or an Additional District Judge or of a Sub-Judge in suits of the value of over Rs. 5,000⁴ will lie to the High Court; but that an appeal from all other decrees or orders of a Sub-Judge and from all those of a District Munsif will lie to the District Judge,⁵ or if specially authorized by the Local Government to an Assistant Judge or a Sub-Judge.⁶

It is an oft-repeated principle of law that the failure to raise a plea of want of jurisdiction in the Appellate Court does not clothe that Court with a jurisdiction not given to it.⁷ But the parties may waive inquiry as to facts necessary for the determination of the question of jurisdiction where that question depends upon facts to be ascertained.⁸

The subject-matter of an appeal should be valued for the purposes of jurisdiction according to the law in force at the date of the appeal and not of the suit which led to it.⁹

A Court is not precluded from hearing an appeal by the mere fact that at one time the plaintiff had been presented in that very Court.¹⁰

Where a suit was tried by Court A and after decree, the venue was transferred to Court B on account of re-distribution of districts, an appeal from the decree of Court A lies to the Court to which appeals would lie from the Court B.¹¹

5. Powers of Appellate Court. — See Order 41 Rules 23, 33, etc.

6. Who can appeal. —

In order to sustain an appeal it is necessary to show that the party desirous of appealing has the right of appeal and that the Court to which he would prefer the appeal has the right to entertain it.¹

As a general principle no one can appeal from a decree unless he was a party to the action or was treated as such or is the legal representative of the party, or unless his privity in estate, title, or interest is apparent on the face of the record.²

The word "parties" in the first condition refers to those persons only who are ranged on either side as plaintiffs and defendants. Such parties, if they are adversely affected by the decree, have a right of appeal against it.⁷ The words "matters in controversy in the suit" are those matters which, from the pleadings, appear to be in dispute between parties ranged on one side as plaintiffs and on the other side as defendants.⁸

With regard to the second condition it may be said as a general rule that a decision cannot be said to adversely affect a person unless it will operate as res judicata against him in any future suit.⁹ Thus, a pro forma defendant against whom the decree will not operate as res judicata cannot appeal and open out the case between the plaintiff and the other defendants.¹⁰ In order to find out whether a decision will operate as res judicata and will thus adversely affect a party, the substance of the decree and the judgment, and not the form must be considered,¹¹ and for this purpose the parties may go behind the decree and see what really the adjudication was.¹² Where a decree is absolutely in favour of a party but some issues are found against him, he has no right of appeal against the decree or the findings¹³ because he is, firstly, not adversely affected thereby and secondly because such findings are not embodied in and do not form part of the decree.¹⁴ As has been observed by the Calcutta High Court in Krishna v. Mohesh,¹⁵ "the question who may appeal is determinable by the commonsense consideration that there can be no appeal where there is nothing to appeal about." But there may be cases where a decision, though on the face of it is entirely in favour of a party defendant, really negatives his right as against the plaintiff and the other defendants. In such a case he does not lose his right of appeal. Thus, where A owes a debt to B who assigns it first to C and then to D and D sues both B and C on the debt alleging that the assignment to C was void, and the suit is decreed against B and dismissed against C, the decree, though on the face of it is in favour of C, necessarily implies that the assignment in his favour is void and C has therefore a right of appeal against it.¹⁶

It will follow from the above general principles that the following persons are entitled to appeal under this Section —

1. A party to the suit who is adversely affected by the decree.¹⁷ Indeed a person who is not a party to the suit or his legal representative cannot be

(There are observations in the judgment which are liable to be interpreted as meaning that there is an exception to the rule that an appeal is a creature of the statute and that such an exception has been created by judicial decisions to the effect that an appeal lies from a finding although the decree itself is in the party's favour — It is submitted that the judgment read as a whole does not mean this — It affirms the proposition that an appeal lies only if permitted by the statute and that an appeal against a mere finding is not possible under the Code — But the judgment proceeds on the ground that the Code does not prescribe as to who can appeal against a decree and hence, even a person in whose favour a decree may appear to have been passed may, under the peculiar circumstances of a case, be really adversely affected by such decree and in such a case he can appeal against the decree.)

2. The legal representative of a deceased party affected by the decree can appeal if the right of the deceased party survives to him but he must first get himself impleaded as such in the suit record.²³

3. The transferee of the interest of a party pending the suit who is, so far as such interest is concerned, bound by the decree, can appeal from the decree provided he also gets himself placed on the record of the suit.²⁴ Where a decree has been passed against the transferor and his transferee, the former alone cannot appeal as he has no interest and is not affected by the decree.²⁵ A transferee after the decree cannot however apply to be impleaded for the purpose of preferring²⁶ or continuing²⁷ the appeal against the concluded decree. Similarly a person whose name is brought on the record after the decree on the ground that he is the real owner, cannot appeal.²⁸

4. Where pending an appeal the appellant is declared an insolvent, the Official Receiver who represents the estate can continue the appeal.²⁹

5. A benamidar may appeal on behalf of the real owner.³⁰

6. The auction-purchaser can appeal from an order setting aside the execution sale on the ground of fraud.³¹

It has been held by the Madras High Court that where a decree has been passed against the manager of a joint Hindu family in his representative capacity, any other member of the family can appeal against the decree.³² But the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has taken a contrary view.³³

Where the appellant's right to appeal is challenged, it is incumbent upon the appellant to establish his right to appeal³⁴ though the practice is to require the respondent at the outset to indicate the grounds upon which his objections are based.³⁵ In cases of doubt as to the existence of the right of appeal, it has been held that the appellant should get the benefit of the doubt.³⁶

7. Co-plaintiffs.—It has been seen in Note 6 above that one of the conditions necessary for enabling a party to prefer an appeal is that the subject-matter of the appeal must be a "matter in controversy in the suit." It follows therefore that the matters which form the subject of dispute between the plaintiffs and defendants, will be outside the conditions,¹ and one plaintiff cannot be allowed to appeal against his co-plaintiff in respect of such matters.²

8. Co-defendants.—The same principles equally apply to appeals by one co-defendant against another. Where a case is raised not only between the plaintiffs and defendants, but between the defendants themselves inter se and the decision therein adversely affects a defendant, he is entitled to appeal against his co-defendants.¹ As has already been seen in Note 6, a decision cannot be said to adversely affect a person, unless it will operate as res judicata against him in any future suit² and where in substance a decision will so operate between the defendants it would be contrary to all principles of justice and equity to hold that a defendant is precluded from agitating the matter in appeal against the co-defendants.³

Illustrations

1. A brings a suit against B and C. A decree is passed against B alone, the suit being dismissed as against C. B can appeal against C and A in order to make C also liable for A's claim.⁴ The reason is that the liability of B and C to A was a question in controversy between A, the plaintiff, and B and C, the defendants, and that the decision on that point making B solely liable has adversely affected him.

2. A sues B and C to enforce his right of pre-emption on the allegation of a sale by B to C. B denies the sale to C but C asserts the sale, pleads waiver by the plaintiff of his right of pre-emption. The suit is dismissed on the finding that B did not sell to C. It was held that C cannot appeal against B and A against the finding because the said finding will not operate as res judicata against C and therefore does not adversely affect him.⁵

A view, different from that in illustration 1, however, has been expressed by the Allahabad High Court to the effect that where a suit has been dismissed against one of two defendants and the plaintiff does not appeal against the portion dismissed, the defendant against whom the decree was passed cannot appeal against the decree seeking to make the co-defendant liable, and the Appellate Court cannot, even if such an appeal is preferred, modify or alter the decision against the co-defendant which the trial Court declined to pass, and in the decision of which the plaintiff has acquiesced.⁶ They declined to follow the view expressed by the Calcutta Full Bench in I. L. R. 31 Calcutta 643.⁷ But the rulings do not mention any principle as the ground of their decision and cannot be accepted as sound law, especially in view of O. 41 R. 33, which empowers the Court to pass such orders as the circumstances of the case require. Where a suit is dismissed and the judgment contains findings between the co-defendants which are not embodied in the decree nor necessarily implied therein, such findings cannot adversely affect the defendants and no appeal lies therefrom by one co-defendant against another.⁸

It is irregular for defendants with different defences to a suit and with different grounds of appeal, to join in a single appeal.⁹

9. Appeal by minor. — When once a guardian ad litem is appointed in a suit for a minor, the appointment unless and until revoked by the Court, continues not only for the term of the suit, but also for purposes of appeal.¹ He is the only person therefore who can file an appeal from the decree passed against the minor.² If he does not choose to appeal against the decree, no other person, even though he be the natural guardian, can assume guardianship and prefer the appeal³ unless perhaps where the guardian ad litem is acting against the interest of the minor. But the mere fact that he does not prefer the appeal does not necessarily show that he is acting in dereliction of his duty. The natural inference, on the other hand, would be that he does not think it advisable in the interests of the minor to carry on the litigation further.² See also Notes on Rules in Order 32.

10. Right of appeal, when lost.—Whatever may be party's right of appeal under the general law, there is no doubt that he may agree not to appeal or may wave or forgo his right of appeal, or may be estopped by his conduct from asserting such right.¹

Where a party agrees to abide by a decision and not to appeal therefrom, the agreement will be binding on him, provided it is a lawful one.² An agreement, for instance, by the guardian of a minor not to appeal is not binding on the minor in law as the same is not for his benefit.³ The agreement not to appeal must, however, be a clear one.⁴

A failure to abide by the terms of the decree does not disentitle a party to appeal.⁵

Where a party waves or abandons his right of appeal, the Appellate Court will refuse to allow him to prosecute the appeal.⁶ Whether a party has waived such right is a question of fact depending upon the circumstances of the case.⁷

Where a party accepts the order of a Court, acts under it and thereby gets benefitted by it, he will be estopped from questioning the order later on.⁸ Thus, where a dismissal for default is set aside and the case remanded by the Appellate Court conditionally on the appellant paying a certain amount to the respondent as compensation, and the respondent accepts the compensation money, he will thereafter be estopped from appealing against the order of remand.⁹ But, where a plaintiff in a partition suit takes possession of the properties allotted to him under the partition decree, this does not preclude him from appealing against the decree on the ground that he is entitled to more. The reason is that his claiming a larger share of properties in appeal is in no way inconsistent with his taking possession of the share allotted under the decree appealed against and there is no question of estoppel.¹⁰ Where a vendee in a pre-emption suit appeals and obtains a stay of execution on his making a certain deposit, but before the appeal is heard he withdraws the deposit, he will lose his right of appeal.¹¹

11. Execution proceedings.—This Section does not apply to execution proceedings where the orders passed are not decrees within the meaning of Section 2 (2) of the Code.¹

12. Appeal against ex parte decree.—The Code of 1859 prohibited an appeal against an ex parte decree, but by judicial decisions the prohibition was held to apply only to cases where the defendant did not appear at all and not to cases where he, having once appeared, subsequently failed to appear.¹

The Code of 1877 removed the prohibition, but neither that Code nor that of 1882 made any express provision for an appeal against an ex parte decree. The conflict of decisions therefore continued as to whether, and under what circumstances, an appeal lay against an ex parte decree.²

It was in order to remove the doubt and the conflict that clause (3) was added by Section 45 of the Civil Procedure (Amendment) Act VII of 1888.³ It is now quite clear that an appeal will lie from every ex parte decree whether the defendant has appeared once, or not at all.

There are four remedies open to a person to question a decree that has been passed ex parte against him, viz. —

- (1) an application under Order 9 Rule 13;
- (2) an appeal under Section 96 clause (2);
- (3) an application for review under Order 47,⁴ and
- (4) a suit on the ground of fraud.⁵

Both the remedies (1) and (2) can be prosecuted concurrently as long as no decision is given in either of them. The mere fact that one remedy has been resorted to will not ipso facto bar the other.⁶ Nor does the fact that no application has been filed under O. 9 R. 13 affect the maintainability of the appeal.⁷

Where the Appellate Court gives a decision in the appeal, then, as has been seen in Note 2 above, the decree of the first Court is superseeded and that Court cannot proceed with the application to set aside the ex parte decree.⁸ The Appellate Court may, however, withdraw the application from the first Court and deal with it itself.⁹ It has also been seen in Note 2 above that where during the pendency of the appeal, the application under O. 9 R. 13 is granted by the first Court, the decree appealed against becomes non-existent and the appeal abates.¹⁰

But suppose the first Court refused to set aside the ex parte decree. How does it affect the powers of the Appellate Court to deal with the appeal? There is a consensus of judicial opinion that neither the rejection of the application under O. 9 R. 13, nor the omission to file an appeal against that order is a bar to an appeal from the decree itself.¹¹ It has also been held that where the application is refused on the merits by the first Court, the Appellate Court is precluded in an appeal against the ex parte decree from discussing the propriety of the ex parte order itself apart from the merits of the case on the law and the evidence.¹² This is in accordance with reason, because a special remedy by way of appeal against the order is provided for in the Code and where the law points out the remedy in particular way, it is in general that way that must be followed and not another. But where the application is dismissed in default of parties and there is no finding on the merits, it is competent for the Appellate Court to go into the question of the propriety of the ex parte order.¹³

But where no application is filed under O. 9 R. 13 and only an appeal is preferred against the ex parte decree, there is a conflict of opinion as to the power of the Appellate Court to question the propriety of the ex parte order itself and to remand the case for re-trial on that point. All the High Courts, except the High Courts of Allahabad and Rangoon and the Chief Court of Oudh, agree in holding that the Appellate Court can go into the question and, if necessary, remand the case under O. 41, R. 23 or under Section 151 for a fresh decision on the sufficiency of the cause for non-appearance.¹⁴ The Allahabad and the Rangoon High Courts, and the Oudh Chief Court, on the other hand, hold a contrary view, namely that the Appellate Court is restricted to a consideration of the merits of the case only on the question of law and the evidence let in, and cannot enter into the question of the sufficiency of the cause for the non-appearance of the defendant at the hearing.¹⁵ In view of O. 41 R. 33 under which the Appellate Court has wide powers of passing any order which the trial Court ought to have made, there does not seem to be any good reason why the Appellate Court should be prevented from discussing the question of the non-appearance of the party in cases where he has not applied under O. 9 R. 13, Civil Procedure Code. As stated by Mahmood, J., in Ajudhia Prasad v. Balmukund,¹⁶ "where two proceedings or two remedies are provided by statute, one of them must not be taken as operating in derogation of the other."

1. (27) AIR 1927 Cal 114 (116). (Therefore no revision lies against an order amending decree.)

The Lahore High Court¹³ gives a further reason in support of the conclusion arrived at by the Madras High Court, viz., that where a compromise is proved to have been effected outside Court, the Court must, under O. 23 R. 3, pass a decree in accordance therewith. The parties also, must, at the time of the consent, have contemplated the issue of the decree as a matter of course. The decree so passed is only a formal expression of the agreement of the parties and, under such circumstances, must be deemed to be one passed with the consent of the parties.

Having regard to the fact that in O. 43 R. 1 (m) an appeal is newly provided for from an order recording or refusing to record a compromise and construing this provision with sub-clause (3) of Section 96, it seems clear that the only appeal intended by the Legislature is an appeal against the "recording or refusing to record" the alleged agreement and not a further appeal again from the decree recording the compromise.¹⁴ The views of the Madras and Lahore High Courts are therefore to be preferred.

The proper method, therefore, of questioning a consent decree is either by review or by a regular suit and not by way of appeal.¹⁵ Where a suit is filed to set aside a consent decree, it can be set aside on any ground which would invalidate an agreement¹⁶ such as fraud, misrepresentation or mistake. If the parties clearly agree to be bound by the conclusions which the Court may arrive at by adopting a particular procedure, but such agreement does not result in the Court assuming jurisdiction extra cursum curiæ and does not involve the Court in going outside the ordinary course of procedure, then according to the Madras High Court, the decree may be a consent decree.¹⁹ According to the Allahabad High Court it will still be a consent decree.²⁰

Where a party offers to be bound by the statement on oath of a third person, the decree passed on such oath is not a consent decree. The statement is only conclusive evidence under the Oaths Act, on the basis of which the Court passes the decree.²² Under Section 375 of the old Code a consent decree was final so far as it related to the subject-matter of the suit and it was held that an appeal would lie from a consent decree if it dealt with matters outside the suit and that in such appeal the Appellate Court would modify the decree by omitting such extraneous matters.²³ It was also held under the old Code that an appeal would lie from a consent decree if the agreement or compromise in terms of which the decree was drawn up was not lawful.²⁴ Under the present sub-section (3) of Section 96, there is no appeal from a consent decree in any case, though the order itself recording the compromise is appealable.²⁵ Notwithstanding the above discussion there are nevertheless cases in which decrees, though passed with the consent of the parties, can be appealed against —

- (1) Where the dispute is over the nature of the compromise and the appellant wants to show that the compromise was.²⁶
- (2) Where the consent decree is passed without an order recording the compromise.²⁷ The reason is that such recording is not a mere matter of form and the absence of it deprives the party of a right of appeal against the order, if it had been passed.²⁸

18. Valuation for purposes of a

Section 96 (3) does not apply to or course of appeal. Where a plaintiff values his claim definitively, as in a suit for a debt, that value will determine the appellate forum also, unless by fraud or misrepresentation the plaintiff deliberately overvalues or undervalues the claim for the purpose of choosing his own forum.⁵ In the latter case, it is the true value at which the plaintiff ought to have been valued that will represent the "value of the suit" for purposes of appeal.⁶

But in cases where the plaintiff is entitled to value his suit approximately or tentatively as in a suit for accounts or mesne profits, what is the value of the suit? It is on this point that there has been considerable divergence of opinion and four different views at least, have been expressed :

- (1) The Madras and Allahabad High Courts have held⁷ that the "value of the suit" in such cases means the statutory value of the suit, that is, the value which the plaintiff was entitled to give under the Suits Valuation Act (1887) or other enactments. The Calcutta High Court in the under-mentioned Full Bench case⁸ expressed a similar view but did not refer to a contrary view expressed in an earlier Full Bench decision of the same Court.⁹ The Bombay High Court also held a similar view originally¹⁰ but has, in later decisions, held a different view.¹¹ The Patna High Court has also held that ordinarily the value of the suit as given by the plaintiff in his plaint is to be the determining factor in such cases as regards the value of the appeal.¹²
- (2) The second view which has been held by Calcutta High Court is that the "value of the suit" which determines the course of appeal means the value of the suit as decreed by the Court, and not the tentative value given by the plaintiff in his plaint.¹³ According to a Full Bench decision of the Lahore High Court there is a further distinction between a case where the decree is in excess of the amount claimed and a case where the decree is for a sum less than the amount claimed. In the former case it is the amount decreed that will be "value of the suit" while in the latter case it will be the tentative valuation originally given by the plaintiff.¹⁴ (3) The third view which has been held by Mr. Justice Mukerjee in the Full Bench case in I. L. R. 34 Calcutta 954 is that the "value of the suit" for purposes of appeal is the value as decreed and as accepted by the plaintiff by payment of court-fees on the additional amount decreed.¹⁵ (4) The fourth view is that, in case of Courts of limited pecuniary jurisdiction, as that of the Munisifs and Second Class Subordinate Judges, the value of a suit can in no case exceed the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court and the appeal will therefore always lie to the District Court.¹⁶

It is impossible to reconcile this divergence of opinion on legal principles. This conflict has arisen owing to the wrong method of interpreting statutes. When an enactment such as the Suits Valuation Act entitles the plaintiff to value a suit for accounts or for mesne profits in a particular manner, it is not in accordance with the accepted rules of interpretation to assume that that is not the value but something else, such as the amount decreed by the Court or the amount decreed and accepted by the plaintiff subsequent to the decree. In this view the first of the views set forth above must be taken as the soundest one.

Where on a plea of set-off, a Court gives a decree to the defendant for over Rs. 5,000, it is nevertheless the value of the suit as originally framed that determines the form of appeal.¹⁷ Formerly, however, (under Section 216 of the old Code) the amount of the decree in favour of defendant determined the form of appeal.¹⁸ See also Notes to Order 21 Rule 19, infra.

In suits for partition the proper valuation of the suit is the value of the share sought to be separated and not the value of the entire property.¹⁹ In suits for restitution of conjugal rights, the plaintiff's valuation must be accepted unless it is found that he has overvalued or undervalued it with any ulterior motives.²⁰

In suits for redemption, the court-fee is payable on the principal sum secured²¹ and this fixes also the form of appeal when the mortgagor appeals.²² As to the form of appeal when the mortgagee appealed, see the undermentioned case.²³

[But where in an account suit in which the claim is less than Rs. 5,000 a preliminary decree is passed which does not award any sum, the value of suit will determine the form of appeal. See ('09) 4 Ind Cas 929 (930) (Lah.).]

1. Scope and object of the Section. — This Section is new. Under the old Code objections to the preliminary decree could be raised in the appeal against the final decree.¹ This was felt to be unreasonable as, thereby, a party was permitted to wait till proceedings were carried on to a final stage and large costs were incurred, and then, after the final decree, raise objections which could have been taken at an earlier stage.² It is therefore enacted by the present Section that the failure to appeal against a preliminary decree is a bar to raising any objection to it in the appeal against the final decree.³

A Court while passing a final decree cannot re-open questions determined by a preliminary decree.⁴

2. Preliminary decree. — See Section 2 (2), ante.

3. Effect of not drawing up a preliminary decree.—This Section does not apply unless a preliminary decree is actually drawn up.¹ As to whether there is a right of appeal even when no such decree is drawn up, see the discussion in Note 8 to Section 2 (2). It has been held in the undermentioned cases that no appeal will lie against a mere finding even if such finding is recorded in the form of a decree.²

4. Two or more preliminary decrees, if can be drawn up.—See Note 10 to Section 2 (2) where the subject is fully discussed.

5. Effect of final decree being passed pending appeal against preliminary decree.—Under the old Code an appeal from an order in the nature of a preliminary decree could not be preferred or maintained after a final decree was passed in the case.¹ Under this Code a preliminary decree is a "decree" within Section 2 (2) and is appealable under this Section. Two questions have arisen in this connection —

1. Where an appeal is preferred against the preliminary decree, does the passing of the final decree by the first Court affect the maintainability of the appeal?

2. Is an appeal against the preliminary decree preferable after the final decree has been passed in the suit?

On the first point, all the High Courts have held that a passing of a final decree subsequent to the institution of the appeal will not affect the maintainability of the appeal.² On the second point there is a conflict of opinion. The High Courts of Madras,³

7. Court-fees. — An appeal from a preliminary decree or from a final decree must be stamped ad valorem on the amount of the subject-matter in dispute in the appeal.¹ But where a preliminary decree for partition declares plaintiff's rights to mesne profits and makes provision for its subsequent determination, an appeal against the preliminary decree need not bear a court-fee in respect of the mesne profits, even where the decision as to mesne profits is challenged in appeal.² Where a party appeals first from a preliminary decree and pays ad valorem fee thereon and subsequently appeals to the same Court from the final decree also, he need not pay ad valorem court-fee again on the entire amount awarded by the final decree but only on the amount, if any, in excess of that on which court-fee was already paid.³ An appellant can prefer a single combined appeal from both the preliminary and final decree if the dates permit him to do so, but court-fee must be paid only on the larger of the subject-matters in dispute in respect of the two decrees.⁴

Provided that where the Bench hearing the appeal is composed of two Judges belonging to a Court consisting of more than two Judges, and the Judges composing the Bench differ in opinion on a point of law,⁶ they⁷ may¹¹ state the point of law upon which they differ and the appeal shall then be heard upon that point only⁸ by one or more of the other Judges,⁹ and such point shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority¹⁰ (if any) of the Judges who have heard the appeal, including those who first heard it.

1. Legislative changes.—This Section corresponds to Section 575 of the old Code. The most important change is : the words "they may state the point of law upon which they differ and the appeal shall then be heard upon that point only by one or more of the other Judges and such point shall be decided" in the proviso to clause 2 have been substituted for the words "the appeal may be referred to one or more of the other Judges of the same Court and shall be decided." See Notes 6 and 8 below.

2. Amendments after 1908.—Sub-section (3) has been newly added by the Repealing and Amending Act XVIII of 1928. See Note 12 below.

3. Scope and applicability of the Section.—This Section deals with the question as to how a decision is to be arrived at in an appeal which is heard by a Bench of two or more Judges.

The Section refers in terms to appeals. But the question has arisen whether by virtue of Section 141 of the Code it is applicable to other proceedings. Under the old Code it was held that by virtue of Section 647 (corresponding to Section 141) Section 575 applied to miscellaneous proceedings¹ and applications to the High Court in its extraordinary jurisdiction.² But while the words used in Section 647 of the old Code were "the procedure herein prescribed" the words used in the present Section 141 are "the procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits." It has accordingly been held that Section 98, which prescribes the procedure in regard to appeals, cannot be extended by Section 141 to miscellaneous proceedings such as revision applications.³

3. (15) AIR 1915 Mad 1198 (1196). (Proceedings held to be regulated by Clause 36, Letters Patent (Madras).)
- (25) AIR 1925 Mad 281 (285, 287). (Clause 36 Letters Patent (Madras), applies.)

It was held by the Calcutta High Court in the undermentioned case¹ that a reference to the High Court under S. 66 of the Income Tax Act is not an appeal from any decree and Section 98 cannot be applied to such a proceeding by recourse to Section 141. The Income Tax Act has now been amended by Act XXIV of 1926 by adding Section 66A by which the provisions of Section 98 of the Code are expressly made applicable to reference under Section 66 of that Act.⁵

By virtue of Section 54 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, this Section applies to appeals in land acquisition cases.⁶

As to the effect of this Section on Section 10 (2) of the Punjab Courts Act, and Section 10 of the Central Provinces Courts Act (1917), see the undermentioned cases.⁷

4. Difference of opinion in the decision of preliminary objection.—The decision of a preliminary objection to the hearing of an appeal is not a "hearing" of the appeal but precedes the hearing. Section 98 does not apply to a difference of opinion in such a decision, the words of the Section being "where an appeal is heard," etc.¹

5. Difference of opinion as to part of decree.—Where the Judges agree that a part of the decree should be reversed, but differ as to the rest, then according to the Calcutta,¹ Madras² and Allahabad³ High Courts, the part as to which the Judges agree should be reversed, and rest of the decree confirmed. The Lahore High Court, on the other hand, has held that the whole decree should be confirmed in such a case.⁴

6. "Differ in opinion on a point of law."—The reference under Section 98 to other Judges must be only on a question of law and not on a question of fact.¹ For instances of points of law, see the undermentioned cases.² See also Notes to Section 100.

7. Reference, whether can be made by one of the differing Judges alone.—The use of the pronoun "they" in the present Section seems to show that the reference to other Judges must be made by both the differing Judges. The wording in the previous Code "the appeal may be reversed" permitted a different view being held.¹

8. "The appeal shall then be heard upon that point only." — Under the old Code when the judges hearing an appeal differed on a point of law, the whole case was referred to one or more of the other judges.¹ Under the present Section, it is only the point of law on which they differ that can be so referred and the judges hearing the reference can only hear arguments on the specific point and not the whole appeal.²

9. Reference to be to one or more of the other judges of the Court. — The reference should be heard by one or more of the other judges of the Court, according to the practice of the Bombay,¹ Calcutta² and Lahore³ High Courts. The Allahabad High Court, however, holds that the Bench hearing the reference should include also the judges who originally heard the appeal.⁴ See also the undermentioned case of the Madras High Court.⁵

10. Decision to be according to the opinion of the majority. — Though the reference is, under the Section, to be heard by a judge or judges other than those who heard the case originally, the decision upon the point must be according to the opinion of the majority of the judges who heard the appeal including those who first heard it.¹

11. Differing judges not stating the point of law — Effect. — If the judges differ on a point of law, but do not state the point for the decision of other judges or judges, the decree appealed from should be confirmed.¹ Where the differing judges have, without stating the point as required by the Section, delivered their judgments without any reservation, they cannot subsequently state the point of law.² See also the undermentioned case under Section 23 of Act XXIII of 1861.³

12. Sub-section (3) — Clause 36 of the Letters Patent — Effect of. — Under Clause 36 of the Letters Patent as it originally stood, where there was a difference of opinion among the judges hearing an appeal, the opinion of the senior judge was to prevail,¹ while, under the present Section 98, if there is no majority concurring in reversing or varying a decree, the decree shall be confirmed.² After the amendment of the Letters Patent in 1928, the procedure under Clause 36 of the Letters Patent on a difference of opinion is the same as that under Section 98³ except that —

- (1) a reference under Clause 36 is obligatory, while it is optional under Section 98, and
- (2) the reference under Clause 36 may be on a point of fact as well as of law, while under Section 98 it can only be on a point of law.

Before sub-section (3) of this Section was introduced by the Repealing and Amending Act (XVIII of 1928), there was a difference of opinion as to whether Section 98 or Clause 36 of the Letters Patent was to be applied in appeals to Chartered High Courts. The view generally taken was that Section 98 applied to appeals from *subordinate Courts*⁴ but that Clause 36 applied to appeals preferred under the Letters Patent.⁵ The Calcutta High Court in two cases held that Section 98 should be applied in all cases.⁶ The introduction of sub-section (3) shows clearly that the applicability of Clause 36 is not in any way controlled by this Section. It has accordingly been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court that Clause 36 applies to all appeals to Chartered High Courts, whether from subordinate Courts or under the Letters Patent, and that Section 98 applies only to High Courts *other than Chartered High Courts, e. g., the Chief Courts and Courts of Judicial Commissioners.*⁷ The High Courts of Allahabad,⁸ Lahore⁹ and Patna¹⁰ have followed the view taken by the High Court of Madras.

13. Letters Patent appeal, whether lies from a confirming judgment under sub-section (2) of Section 98. — Before the amended Letters Patent of 1928 was passed, it was held that an appeal under Clause 15 of the Letters Patent lay against the confirming judgment passed under sub-section (2) of this Section.¹ Under the amended Letters Patent no such appeal lies to the High Court.²

Even before the Letters Patent was amended, there was no appeal against a decision arrived at after the reference under the proviso to sub-section (2), because the decision was necessarily that of a majority of the Judges, and the Letters Patent provided for an appeal only where there was an equal division of opinion between the Judges.³

1. Alterations in the Section. — The words “any misjoinder of parties or causes of action” have been newly added. (See Note 4 below and also O. 2 Rr. 3, 4.) The words “whether in the decision or in any order passed in the suit or otherwise” have been omitted and the words “in any proceedings in the suit” have been substituted instead.

2. Scope and object of the Section. — This Section contains one of the most salutary rules of law. Its aim is “to prevent technicalities from overcoming the ends of justice, and from operating as a means of circuitry of litigation.”¹ In other words, a decision which is correct on the merits and is within the jurisdiction of the Court, should not be upset merely for technical and immaterial defects.² The Section deals with objections raised in appeal as regards errors, defects or irregularities of procedure in the lower Court. As laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Maharajah Mahashur Singh v. Baboo Harnuck Narain,³ “the law that an error or irregularity cannot be raised as a ground of appeal only refers to errors, defects or irregularities of procedure, not to rules of law or conditions which affect the substantive rights of the parties.” A non-compliance with every rule of procedure does not ipso facto destroy the validity of the whole proceeding. The purpose of the rule violated must, in each case, be examined.⁴

An error, defect or irregularity of procedure must, in order to be a valid ground of appeal, be a material one, that is, should have either—

- (a) affected the merits of the case,⁵ or
- (b) affected the jurisdiction of the Court.⁶

The merits of a case are said to be affected when the law or error has resulted in an error of judgment.⁷ The term "jurisdiction" in this Section is used in the sense of pecuniary or local jurisdiction or jurisdiction relating to the subject-matter; it does not mean the legal authority of a Court to do certain things.⁸

A mere irregularity, therefore, which does not affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court, is no ground for reversing or varying a decision in appeal.⁹

Though the Section refers in terms to decrees, yet, it is illustrative of a general principle.¹⁸

In Muhammad Husain Khan v. Babu Kishva Nandan,¹¹ their Lordships of the Privy Council held that although the provisions contained in the Civil Procedure Code do not regulate the procedure of the Privy Council in hearing appeals from India, yet, as the rule embodied in this Section proceeds upon a sound principle, and is calculated to promote justice, the rule should be followed by the Privy Council also. It will be useful in dealing with this Section to refer to the provisions of Section 105 which provides affirmatively that an error, defect or irregularity in any order affecting the decision of the case can be raised as a ground of appeal in an appeal from the decree in the suit.¹⁵

The Section applies to proceedings under the Agra Tenancy Act.¹⁶

3. Retrospective operation of the Section.— This Section regulates the procedure of the Appellate Court and therefore is applicable to all appeals heard after the new Code came into force even though the suit itself was instituted under the old Code.¹⁷

4. Misjoinder and non-joinder.— Section 578 of the old Code provided that no decree should be varied or reversed "on account of any error, defect or irregularity, whether in the decision or in any order passed in the suit or otherwise not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court." This, as has been seen already in Note 2 above, was interpreted to mean errors and irregularities subsequently committed in a suit which had been properly instituted.¹ A mere misjoinder of causes of action which did not affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court was held cured by the Section.² But a misjoinder whether of parties or causes of action or of both which affected the very institution of the suit was held to be outside the scope of the Section.³ The introduction of the words "on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action" in the present Section makes it clear that the Appellate Court cannot now dismiss a suit for such misjoinder⁴ unless it affected the merits of the case' or the jurisdiction of the Court.⁹ It may, however, in order to meet the ends of justice, allow a party to amend the plaint⁷ or to withdraw the suit against the mis-joined defendants with liberty to bring a fresh suit,⁸ or give a finding against each misjoined defendant separately.⁹

Though the Section uses the words "misjoinder of parties or causes of action," a misjoinder of both the parties and causes of action has also been held to be within the Section.¹⁰ There is some conflict of opinion as to whether the word "misjoinder" in this Section includes "non-joinder."¹¹ This has been due to the fact that the Legislature, while it has newly introduced the word "non-joinder" in Order I Rule 9 (which provides that no suit shall be defeated by reason of misjoinder or non-joinder of parties) has not so done in Section 99.

This Section is limited in its application to where an appellant raises an objection that there has been a misjoinder in the lower Court. It does not deal with a case where the lower Court decides that there is a misjoinder and the appellant contends that there is no misjoinder. The observations of the Lahore High Court in the undermentioned case,¹² treating such a case as being one under the Section, do not seem to be sound.

5. Error, defect or irregularity, not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court.—The following irregularities of procedure under the Code have been held to be mere irregularities which do not entail a reversal or variation of the decree of the lower Court. For other cases of irregularities, see Note 2.

6. Analogous provisions of law.—The principle of this Section that a technical objection should not stand in the way of upholding a decision which is substantially just and correct on the merits, has been recognised in other Acts also. Under Section 167 of the Evidence Act, an improper admission or rejection of evidence is not of itself a ground, for a new trial or reversal of any decision in any case, if it appears that independently of the evidence objected to and admitted, there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision,¹ or that if the rejected evidence had been received, it would not have varied the decision.²

Under Section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act it is provided that an under-valuation or overvaluation of a suit or appeal will not be a ground of appeal even if it affects the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court trying the suit or appeal, unless (a) the objection thereto is taken at the earliest possible opportunity or, (b) that by reason of such overvaluation or undervaluation the disposal of the suit or appeal has been affected on the merits.³

Before the Act was passed, an overvaluation or undervaluation of a suit was considered as an irregularity governed by the provisions of Section 350 of the Code of 1859 or Section 378 of the Code of 1882, corresponding to Section 99 of the present Code. Accordingly it was held that where such valuation affected the jurisdiction of the Court it was a valid ground of appeal.⁴ Under the present Act, even if such valuation affects jurisdiction, it will not be a ground of appeal unless the merits of the case are also affected thereby.⁵

The Section has however been held to be restricted in its applicability to cases where the valuation depends upon the discretion of the parties or the Court. It is not applicable to cases where the valuation is in violation of the rules of the Court-fee Act.⁶

Under Section 36 of the Stamp Act, 1899, where an instrument has been admitted, the admission cannot be called into question at any subsequent stage of the proceedings, whether in the original Court itself or in the Appellate Court on the ground that the instrument has not been duly stamped.⁷ But the Appellate Court may make

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES

100. [S. 584.] (1) Save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code³ or by any other law for the time being in force,⁴ an appeal shall lie to the High Court⁶ from every decree⁸ passed in appeal⁵ by any Court subordinate⁷ to a High Court, on any of the following grounds, namely:—

(a) the decision being contrary to law¹²⁻²⁰ or to some usage having the force of law;²¹

(b) the decision having failed to determine some material issue of law or usage having the force of law;²²

(c) a substantial²⁴ error or defect in the procedure²⁵⁻²⁷ provided by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits.²⁴

1. The words "save where" have been substituted for the words "unless, when" which occurred in the old Section.
2. The word "expressly" is new. Even under the old Code it had been held that the right of second appeal conferred by the Code was a valuable substantive right, that such a right could not be taken away by mere implication; and that when the Legislature intended to take away the right it would do so expressly.¹ The insertion of the word "expressly" in the present Section makes the position clear.² (In this connection, vide Note 3 below.)
3. The words "body of" are new.
4. The words "for the time being in force" are new.
5. The word "specified" which occurred before the word "law" in the old Section has been omitted. This change was introduced to set at rest certain doubts entertained under the old Section, as to whether the words "specified law" meant statute law or law specified in the memorandum of appeal.³
6. The word "some" occurring before the word "usage" is new.

Section 101 corresponds to Section 555 of the Code of 1882 without any change.

2. Scope, object and applicability of the Sections. — It has been seen in Note 2 to Section 96 ante that a right of appeal is not a natural or inherent right attaching to litigation, and does not exist and cannot be assumed unless expressly given by statute or by rules having the force of statute.⁴ It has also been seen that parties cannot confer a right of appeal upon themselves in any matter by agreement or mutual consent.⁵ These principles apply with equal force to second or special appeals and, therefore, a right of second appeal does not exist unless expressly given by statutory provisions. Section 100 is such an express provision, and it declares that a second or special appeal shall lie from every decree passed in first appeal on the grounds mentioned therein. Section 101 enacts that no second appeal shall lie except on the grounds mentioned in Section 100.³

The scope of a first appeal differs from that of a second appeal in that the former is not limited to any particular grounds of appeal such as is provided by this Section. The reason for imposing limitations on the grounds that may be taken in second appeal is based on grounds of public policy expressed in the maxim interest reipublice ut sit finis litium — it concerns the State that there be an end to litigation.⁴ The conditions mentioned in the Section must therefore be strictly fulfilled before a second appeal can be maintained and no Court in India or elsewhere has any power to add to or enlarge those grounds.⁵ When a second appeal is brought up for admission, the Judge has jurisdiction to see whether the grounds mentioned in the Section exist and to reject the appeal if no such grounds exist.⁶ And even if an order of admission had been passed ex parte by a single Judge of the High Court, it may be impugned and set aside by the Bench before whom the appeal is brought up for hearing, on the ground that the reasons for the admission are erroneous or inadequate.⁷

Sections 100 and 101 read together make it quite clear that —

- (1) a second appeal will lie only on the ground of an error in *law or procedure*⁸ and that
(2) a second appeal will not lie merely on the ground of an error on a question of fact.⁹

It is the decision of lower Appellate Court that is to be referred to in the grounds of second appeal, and not that of the original Court,¹⁰ and no decree can be asked for in second appeal against a person against whom there was no first appeal.¹¹ Further, the decision of the lower Appellate Court will be considered only on the point raised by the appellant, and the rejection of the appeal does not mean that the High Court necessarily affirms all the findings which the lower Appellate Court may have incidentally come to.¹²

A decision that a particular question is not in dispute cannot be attacked in special appeal; the proper procedure in such a case is to apply for review.¹³ The rule that a finding of fact cannot be attacked in second appeal does not apply to second appeals to which the provisions of Sections 100 and 101 of the Civil Procedure Code do not apply.¹⁴

As to the jurisdiction of the lower Courts, after an appeal is filed, over the subject-matter of the litigation and the effect of the exercise of such jurisdiction on the second appeal, see Section 96 Note 2, ante.

The grounds of appeal set forth in this Section have been extended to second appeals under various local or special enactments.¹⁵

The High Court will not set aside, in second appeal, a decree of the lower Appeal-late Court unless it is shown to be wrong.¹⁶

3. "Save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code,"—A second appeal will always lie to the High Court from an appellate decree of a Court subordinate to a High Court, unless precluded by some express provision of law.¹ Thus, where any Section of the Code has declared that any decision shall be final, no second appeal will lie from such decision. The following are some of such provisions—

(i) Section 102.²
 (ii) Section 104.³
 (iii) Order 47 Rule 7.⁴
 (iv) Paragraph 16 clause (2) of the Second Schedule.⁵

7. "Court subordinate to a High Court." — See Section 3, ante.

The Court of the Political Agent of the Southern Mahratta Country has been held to be a Court subordinate to the High Court, and a second appeal will lie therefrom to the High Court.¹ But a special Judge under Section 104 clause (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, is not a Court subordinate to the High Court and no second appeal will lie from his decision.² Similarly, where under a scheme-decree of the High Court directing the District Judge to select a trustee the latter does so, he acts simply as a persona designata and no second appeal will lie from his selection.³

8. "Decree," meaning of. — See Section 2 (2), ante.

As to decrees passed without jurisdiction and the right of appeal therefrom, see Note 15 below.

It is only where the decision of the lower Appellate Court amounts to a decree that an appeal lies therefrom to the High Court under this Section;¹ otherwise not.²

9. Execution cases. —

Where an order in execution amounts to a decree under Section 2 (2) read with Section 47, a second appeal will lie therefrom as in the case of every other decree.¹ Where, however, a second appeal is barred in the suit itself, e. g., suits of a small cause nature, no second appeal will lie from an order in execution in such a suit though such order may fall under Section 47 and amounts to a decree.²

Note 9

1. ('33) AIR 1933 All 57 (59): 54 All 1031.

2. See Section 102, Note (1).

In the case of orders in execution which do not amount to decrees, no second appeal will lie, though a first appeal may lie if the order falls under Section 104, as an appealable order.

10. Separate appeals against separate decrees. — Where, in appeals relating to the same matter between the same parties, the lower Appellate Court passes separate decrees, then separate appeals should be filed with respect to those decrees. Where two appeals were preferred against a single decree by two sets of defendants and the result of the appeals was that the suit was dismissed, it was, however, held that the plaintiffs need not file two second appeals, and that it was enough if they filed one second appeal.

11. Grounds of second appeal — General. — A second appeal will lie on the following main grounds —

- (1) The decision being contrary to law.
- (2) The decision being contrary to usage having the force of law.
- (3) Failure to determine some material issue of law.
- (4) Failure to determine some material issue of usage having the force of law.
- (5) Substantial error or defect in procedure which may possibly have affected the decision of the case on the merits.

12. Contrary to law — General. — A Court commits an error of law if it acts contrary to, or fails to apply the provisions of, any law¹ or any legal principle.² Thus, the failure to draw a presumption under Sections 79 to 85 of the Evidence Act, 1872, is an error of law. But the word "law" is not limited to statute law alone³ but will also include general principles of law.⁴ In deciding disputes before them, Courts should act in accordance with such principles of law. Thus —

- (1) They should clearly understand the issue or the matter in dispute before them. A misconception of issue or of the true questions in controversy in the case is an error of law.⁵
- (2) They should arrive at their findings of fact from the evidence tendered before them. A finding based on no evidence or in disregard of evidence⁶ or on *inadmissible evidence*⁷ or on assumptions of facts without inquiry⁸ is an error of law.
- (3) They are bound to draw, for the purpose of deciding the issue before them, such inferences of fact as are reasonable from the facts placed weight and importance, or the evidence relied upon by the first Court, has not been dealt with in the judgment, it may be regarded as sufficient proof that the evidence has not been considered.⁹ But the High Court will not interfere in second appeal with the judgment of the first Appellate Court on the ground of the failure to consider material evidence, if such evidence had not been brought to the notice of the lower Appellate Court¹⁰ or if it had not been relied upon before the said Court.¹¹

14. Misconception of issue. — See Note 12 above.

15. Appellate Court assuming jurisdiction. — An Appellate Court acts contrary to law if it acts without jurisdiction in any matter.¹ It has already been seen in Note 14 to Section 96 ante, that a decree made without jurisdiction possesses none of the qualities of a "decree" and that if there is a statutory appeal made in suits of that character, an appeal is competent from such decree. The same principles apply to first appellate decrees which are appealable under this Section.²

But every decree, whether passed with or without jurisdiction, is appealable under this Section only where there is no express provision to the contrary in the body of the Code or in any other law for the time being in force. Thus, Section 27 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, provides that a decree or order of a Small Cause Court shall be final. Similarly, an order passed under O. 21 Rr. 60, 61, 98, 99 or 101 has been declared by O. 21 Rr. 63 and 103 to be conclusive. Where in such cases an appeal is entertained by the lower Appellate Court, no second appeal will lie even though the adjudication of the first Appellate Court may amount to a decree. It has accordingly been held by the Madras³ and Bombay⁴ High Courts that no second appeal will lie from the decree of the first Appellate Court where the first appeal itself is not competent in law. The Allahabad,⁵ Calcutta,⁶ Lahore⁷ and Patna⁸ High Courts have, however, held that a second appeal will lie even if no appeal lay to the first Appellate Court. The decisions are merely based on the view that a decree passed without jurisdiction is nevertheless a decree and is open to appeal. The fact that even a decree is appealable only "save as otherwise expressly provided" was not adverted to in those decisions. It is submitted that the decisions cannot be accepted as correct.

No second appeal will, in any case, lie against the decision of the lower Appellate Court without jurisdiction where such decision will not be appealable even if passed with jurisdiction. Thus, where the first Appellate Court entertains without jurisdiction an appeal against an order, no second appeal will lie because no such appeal will lie under Section 104 clause (2) even if the first Appellate Court had entertained the appeal with jurisdiction.⁹ But where the lower Appellate Court erroneously dismisses an appeal on the ground that no appeal lies to it, the dismissal is nevertheless a decree and is open to second appeal.¹⁰

16. Exercise of discretion by the lower Appellate Court. — Where a discretion to do or not to do a particular act is vested in the Court by the provisions of the Code, the Court is bound to exercise such discretion in one way or other. A refusal to exercise it or a non-exercise of it is an error or defect in procedure within the meaning of the Section.¹ Where a Court does exercise its discretion it must do so judicially,² i. e., on sound legal principles.³ An exercise of discretion in an arbitrary, unreasonable⁴ or non-judicial⁵ manner or which is based on wrong conclusions of fact⁶ is an error of law which will be a valid ground of second appeal. But where the Court has exercised its discretion in a judicial manner, there is no error either of law or of procedure and consequently, such exercise of discretion cannot be interfered with in second appeal.⁸ The Patna High Court has in the undermentioned case⁹ observed as follows: "In short, these exercises of discretion by lower Courts, whether the trial Court or the first Appellate Court, must be remedied, if at all, at once by the superior Court on the application of the party aggrieved and it is too late if that party allows the case to proceed and then seeks to interfere with the discretion in appeal." The above observations do not appear to be sound as the assumption on which they are based viz., that the aggrieved party would, in every case, have a remedy even apart from an appeal from the ultimate decision of the case, is not correct. The question whether an appeal lies or not from any particular exercise of discretion is, however, largely an academic one, as it is necessary to examine in each case the facts of the case, before the question can be answered. If on such examination the exercise of the discretion is found to be vitiated by any of the above-mentioned circumstances, the second appeal will be upheld, if, on the other hand, it is found to have been exercised judicially, the appeal would fail.¹⁰ The following are all discretionary matters in which the High Court will not, in second appeal, interfere unless the discretion has not been exercised by the lower Appellate Court in a judicial manner and in accordance with legal principles —

Granting of adjournments, summoning and enforcing the attendance of witnesses. — Granting adjournments,¹¹ enforcing the attendance of a witness by any particular method of coercive process,¹² refusing to punish a recalcitrant witness,¹³ refusing to summon witnesses on the ground of delay,¹⁴ refusing to summon plaintiff as a witness for the defendant,¹⁵ and refusing to allow the calling of more witnesses after the case is closed.¹⁶

Regarding omission to examine a witness tendered, see the undermentioned case.¹⁷

Admission or refusal to admit documents. — Refusal of an adjournment in order to send for documents,¹⁸ admitting or refusing to admit documents not produced at the first hearing.¹⁹

Admission or rejection of secondary evidence. — Admission or rejection of secondary evidence,²⁰ disallowing presumptive evidence,²¹ and drawing a presumption under Section 90 of the Indian Evidence Act for or against the genuineness of documents.²²

*Refusal by the lower Appellate Court to allow a point not mentioned in the memorandum of appeal.*⁴³ — But allowing a point to be raised when the finding on it has not been appealed from will be a ground of second appeal.⁴⁴

*Admission of additional evidence in appeal.*⁴⁵ — In a case, however, where the lower Appellate Court had not exercised its discretion judicially but had refused to admit additional evidence on the ground that there would be no end to litigation, it was held broadly by a majority of the Full Bench of the High Court of Madras⁴⁶ that a refusal to admit additional evidence is, in no case, a ground of second appeal. Sadashiva Aiyar, J., dissented from this view and held that the question whether the discretion was exercised properly was a question of law and could be interfered with in second appeal. The view of the majority of the Full Bench is based on no other reason than that it has been the practice of the Courts not to entertain second appeals on that point and that whether the lower Appellate Court “requires” any additional evidence is for that Court alone to say, and it is not for a superior Court to control its discretion. It is respectfully submitted that the view of the Full Bench is not correct.

20. Disbelieving witnesses on grounds opposed to law. — It is the function of the Court to come to a conclusion after weighing the evidence let in on both sides. Its decisions as to the credibility of the witnesses is neither an error of law nor of procedure and will not be interfered with in second appeal unless the witnesses are disbelieved on grounds which are opposed to law.² Thus, where a witness is disbelieved on vague or general grounds,³ e. g., that he belongs to a particular class and witnesses of that class are not credible,⁴ the Court commits an error of law which can be attacked in second appeal.

21. Contrary to usage having the force of law. — The expression "usage having the force of law" means a local or family usage as distinguished from the general law.¹ A usage is a rule obtaining in a particular family or in a particular local area in derogation of the ordinary law.² A decision on the question whether parties in a particular case belong to one system of law and not to another is not a decision on any usage.³
In order that a usage may have the force of law it is essential that it should be ancient, invariable, certain and reasonable.⁴ Questions as to existence of a custom or usage having the force of law are generally questions of mixed law and fact,⁵ the case, it was held that the High Court can see whether such a question was involved or not.²⁰

In the Punjab, a question of custom cannot be taken up in second appeal without a certificate under Section 41 clause (3) of the Punjab Courts Act, 1918. See also the undermentioned cases.²¹

22. Failure to determine any issue of law or usage having the force of law.— Failure to determine an issue of law or usage having the force of law is a ground of second appeal.¹

23. Errors or defects in procedure—General—Clause (c).—Section 99 ante, which applies to appeals from original decrees, provides that no decree shall be reversed or varied on account of any error, defect or irregularity not affecting the merits of the case. In other words, where an error or defect could not or does not affect the merits of the case, the Appellate Court cannot upset the decision of the original Court. Section 100 clause (c) provides that an error or defect in procedure which is substantial enough to have possibly produced an error or defect in the decision of the case on the merits is a ground of second appeal.² The reason for the difference between the two Sections lies in the fact that a Court of second appeal cannot go into a question of fact as the first Appellate Court can, and that without doing so, it would not be possible to say in any given case whether the error or defect does or does not, in fact, affect the decision of the case on the merits.

The word 'procedure' as used in this clause must be understood in its most generic sense, including all the rules contained in the Civil Procedure Code or any other law regulating the investigation of cases by the Civil Courts.³ An erroneous finding of fact is a different thing from an error or defect in procedure, and the fact that the lower Appellate Court believed witnesses on the one side in preference to those on the other is not an error of procedure even if the reasons therefor are bad.⁴

The following are examples of errors in procedure—

24. The errors or defects must be substantial and must be such as to possibly produce error or defect in the decision on the merits. — An error or defect in procedure will not be a ground of second appeal unless it is substantial and unless it is likely to have caused an error or defect in the decision of the case on the merits. Thus, the judgment of the lower Appellate Court which is meagre and not in accordance with the rules is an irregularity; but unless the error is substantial and capable of affecting decision on the merits v. e., unless it can be shown that the said Court failed to apply its mind properly to the case or to the evidence or that the appellants are prejudiced in any way, the error will not be a ground of second appeal.

- (viii) Omission to employ a regular officer of Court for making local enquiry.²¹ Where the appointment of an amin as commissioner to effect partition was acquiesced in, in the first Court, no objection to such appointment should be allowed to be taken in appeal. The allowing of such an objection in first appeal was held to be a ground of second appeal.²²
- (ix) Hearing an appeal before the date fixed in the presence of the pleaders of the parties.²³
- (x) Committing an error as to valuation not affecting the jurisdiction.²⁴

The following have been held to be no errors or defects in procedure, much less substantial errors or defects —

- (i) Omission to make specific mention of a document in the judgment.²⁵
- (ii) Refusal by the lower Appellate Court to take notice of a question not raised in the memorandum of appeal.²⁶ On the other hand, if the lower Appellate Court takes up any such question, it will be a ground of second appeal.²⁷
- (iii) Dismissing a suit for misjoinder of parties.²⁸
- (iv) Making a mistake in the matter of accounts²⁹ or making a mistake in the calculation of the claim decreed.³⁰

25. Omission to frame or try issues of facts properly. — An omission to frame proper issues is an error or defect in procedure, and if it would have possibly affected the decision on the merits, it would be a ground of second appeal.¹ Where, however, the lower Court framed wrong issues but the findings were what they would have been if the correct issues had been framed, the High Court will not interfere inasmuch as the decision of the case on the merits has not been affected.²

Similarly, an objection that a matter was not raised in the pleadings and did not properly form the subject of an issue, will not be allowed to be taken in second appeal when the parties had let in evidence on the point and the matter had been argued in the lower Courts and no prejudice was established.³

The failure to try, determine and decide a material issue is a good ground of second appeal.⁴

26. Defective judgment. — Parties to a suit are entitled to the benefit of a proper discussion of the materials on record based upon a correct view of the law applicable to them.¹ In this view the Code has in O. 41 R. 31 prescribed that the judgment of the Appellate Court shall be in writing and shall state —

(a) the points for determination;

(b) the decision thereon;

(c) the reasons for the decision; and

(d) where the decree appealed from is varied or reversed, the relief to which the appellant is entitled.

A judgment of the first Appellate Court which does not contain the said particulars is no judgment at all and will be set aside in second appeal.² Thus, where a suit was dismissed arbitrarily on the ground that the subject-matter involved was very small, the dismissal was set aside in second appeal.³ Similarly, where the lower Appellate Court reversed the decision of the first Court merely saying that the evidence was meagre, a second appeal was held to lie.⁴ But the mere fact that the judgment does not deal with all the evidence⁵ or all the circumstances⁶ relied upon by the first Court, or the fact that the discussion of the evidence is unsatisfactory,⁷ or that the judgment contains certain mis-statements,⁸ or that the judgment is written in a few lines,⁹ is not a ground of second appeal if it does not affect the decision on the merits. Similarly the fact that the reasons for differing from the lower Court's judgment are not specifically stated in the judgment, is not in itself a ground of second appeal where the reasons are evident and it is otherwise clear that the evidence has been considered in arriving at the finding.¹⁰

The following have also been held to be defects in judgment which will justify a second appeal —

- (i) Where the judgment is uncertain in its meaning.¹¹
- (ii) Where from the judgment it is difficult to discover what the conclusions are which have been arrived at on evidence.¹²
- (iii) Where a finding is vague and indefinite¹³ or not legal.¹⁴
- (iv) Where the decision of a lower Appellate Court is based on an objection to court-fee taken for the first time before it.¹⁵
- (v) Where additional evidence is admitted in appeal without recording reasons as required by O. 41 R. 27.¹⁶

27. Admission or rejection of evidence. — The admission and rejection of documents is a matter of procedural law. In this sense the admissibility of evidence is question of law¹ and an error or defect therein is a ground of second appeal,² provided it is one which may possibly have affected the case on the merits.³ Thus, where the objection to the admission of evidence is based on a formal defect,⁴ or where the lower Court has arrived at the decision independently of the evidence wrongly admitted,⁵ the High Court will not interfere in second appeal. Nor will it interfere where the improper admission of evidence objected to was due to the conduct of the party complaining of it.⁶

facts from which it is drawn. If not so drawn, it is an error of law. The question, therefore, whether an inference of fact is reasonable or is warranted by facts, is also a question of law.

A mixed question of law and fact is one where in order to give a finding thereon it is necessary to answer a question of fact and also a question of law. Thus, as has already been seen in Note 21 ante, where the question is whether a valid custom exists, it is necessary to find, first, that there were a number of instances in which a course of conduct was followed, and secondly, that such instances are sufficient to establish the legal elements of a custom, namely, reasonableness, certainty and *with other circumstances or extraneous evidence.*⁶ Where the nature and character of a document are clear and the only question in dispute is whether the real contract between the parties is something different from that contained in the document, no question of the construction of document is involved and no second appeal lies.⁷ Similarly, where the words are clear and the only question is whether property has been sufficiently specified,⁸ or whether a particular property is included in it,⁹ the question involves no construction of documents. Again, where two interpretations are possible, the fact that the lower Appellate Court has adopted one rather than the other is no error of law or procedure and is no ground of second appeal.¹⁰ Where the question is whether two documents executed on the same day are connected, so that one is a consideration for the other, the question is not one of interpretation of documents and if the lower Courts ascertain their connexion on evidence other than that of the documents themselves, the finding is one of fact which cannot be challenged in second appeal.¹¹

The construction of a document as regards its legal effect will only arise where the document is an instrument of title or is a contract or is otherwise the direct foundation of legal rights.⁵

A finding that a document is so worded as to obscure its meaning and prevent parties from understanding its nature or effect has been held to be a question of fact having nothing to do with construction of the document.¹²

A conclusion based on a misreading of a document is like one based on a misreading of evidence and as such is an error of law which can be corrected in second appeal.¹³ See Note 13 above.

interpretation will be a question of law.⁵ Similarly, the question whether a word has been used in a restricted sense is a question of law.⁶

32. Inference from proved facts — Presumptions and onus of proof. — It has been observed in Note 28 above that an inference of fact from proved facts is a question of fact, but that a legal inference from proved facts is one of law.⁷ A Court is bound, in law, to draw the necessary inferences, whether of fact or of law, in coming to a conclusion on the question to be decided. A failure to draw any inference at all *one way or the other is an error of law.*⁸ Thus, where only one inference is possible from proved facts, the failure to draw it is an error of law.⁹ Where, however, one out of two possible inferences are drawn there is no error of law.¹⁰ Similarly, drawing of an inference which is not improper,¹¹ or the omission to draw an inference which does not necessarily follow,¹² are not errors of law and are not grounds of second appeal.

A presumption of fact is really an inference of fact depending on the facts and circumstances of each case and where a Court draws such a presumption or refuses to draw it on a consideration of the facts of the case, it will not be interfered with in second appeal.¹³ But where the Court fails to direct its mind to the question whether it should draw the presumption or not, it commits an error of law inasmuch as it is its legal duty to make up its mind to draw the presumption or not to draw it for reasons to be given by it.¹⁴ A Court will also commit an error of law if it deals improperly with the presumptions which the law raises.¹⁵ For instances of presumptions of law, see Sections 79 to 90 of the Evidence Act. Even in the case of a presumption of law, where a Court "may presume" a particular thing, e. g., the genuineness of an ancient document under Section 90 of the Evidence Act, the matter is in the discretion of the unless such inference or the refusal to draw the inference, as the case may be, can be shown to be demonstrably wrong.³

The incidents of a "joti" tenancy are in the nature of a contract and consequently a decision on the question whether a certain "joti" is a tenure or a varigatti holding is a finding of fact.⁴ Similarly, a finding as to joint tenancy,⁵ or as to the date of commencement of a tenancy,⁶ or as to whether the tenant has held at a uniform rate for 20 years or more,⁷ or as to whether a tenancy has been forfeited by denial of the title of the landlord,⁸ or as to whether certain charges are parts of rent or not,⁹ is a finding of fact.

dispute, the legal inference to be drawn from them is a question of law, which is open to examination in second appeal.⁵ Even where the question is one of legal inference from the facts found, the High Court will not interfere unless such inference is obviously wrong or unless the finding could not be legally arrived at upon the evidence.⁶ A finding on the question whether a person in possession is an ostensible owner or as to who is the true owner, is a finding of fact.⁷

37. Nature of property. — The question as to the nature of a particular property is one of fact unless it involves a consideration of legal principles, in which case it will be a question of mixed law and fact. Thus, the question whether a particular property is ancestral property¹ or a grove² or a "pariyab" land³ or forms part of an estate⁴ or is a separate sub-division⁵ or was thrown into partnership assets⁶ or is joint family property⁷ or is moveable property,⁸ is a pure question of fact. But the question whether a property is a "talukdari property"⁹ or a "sulka stridhana"¹⁰ or has ceased to be part of a mahal¹¹ or is saleable¹² or transferable,¹³ has been held to involve questions of law. It has been held by the Allahabad,¹⁴ Calcutta¹⁵ and Lahore¹⁶ High Courts that the question whether a property has been dedicated to a religious or charitable purpose is a question of fact. The Oudh Chief Court has however held that such a question is one of law or at any rate a mixed question of law and fact.¹⁷

A finding as to ownership is a finding of fact.¹⁸ though where it depends upon legal presumptions, it will be a mixed question of law and fact.¹⁹

Whether a wall erected by a co-owner on top of a joint wall is a joint wall or not is a question of law.²⁰

See also the undermentioned cases.²¹

38. Nature of contract or transaction.—Whether a contract can be implied from certain facts may be a question of fact or of law according to circumstances. If it is based on offer and acceptance, for instance, it is a question of fact. If it is a matter of inference of law to be drawn from proved facts or documents, it will be a question of law.¹ Thus, the question whether certain representations made amount to a warranty, is a question of law.² Even in the latter case if the presumption to be drawn for or against such contract is one depending upon the circumstances of the case, the lower Court's decision drawing or refusing to draw the presumption will be no error of law.³

The following findings with reference to contracts generally are findings of

(1) A finding as to whether a contract has been superseded or not.⁴

(2) A finding as to the legal origin of a presumed contract.⁵

(3) A finding as to whether time was of the essence of a contract.⁶

(4) A finding as to whether a contract is hard and unconscionable or not binding.⁷

(5) A finding as to who committed breach of a contract.⁸

(6) A finding as to the damaged condition of goods in a contract for sale of goods.⁹

(7) A finding as to whether a tender was or was not within time.¹⁰

Questions of waiver, acquiescence and estoppel are not questions of fact but inferences of law from facts proved and are therefore open to examination in second appeal.¹²

The question of negligence is a question of fact.¹³ But whether the inference as to the negligence is warranted by the facts is a question of law.¹⁴ Again, where there is a special legal significance attached by statute to the word "negligence," the question whether there has been such negligence is a question of law.¹⁵ Similarly the legal standard of reasonable care required by Section 151 of the Contract Act,¹⁶ or by Section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, is a question of law.¹⁷

Whether misconduct can be inferred from a set of facts is a question of law.¹⁸ The question of the existence or otherwise of reasonable and probable cause for the doing of a thing is a question of fact,¹⁹ though the question whether the proved facts

47. Interpretation and applicability of the law.—Questions relating to the interpretation and applicability of law are obviously questions of law. Thus, the question whether correct tests have been applied in determining the infringement of legal rights,¹ or whether on the facts proved a relief prayed for should be granted,² or, whether in the circumstances of a case an appeal lies,³ or as to what constitutes exclusion from a joint estate,⁴ or whether an estoppel arises on the facts found,⁵ or whether the requisites for res judicata are proved,⁶ or whether on the facts proved a person can be called a "trespasser,"⁷ or whether the occasion on which a libellous statement is alleged to have been made was a privileged one,⁸ is a question of law. Similarly, the question whether a particular Section of an Act applies or not, to the facts proved in a case, is a question of law.⁹ Thus, the question whether a stipulation in a deed is by way of penalty under Section 74 of the Indian Contract Act,¹⁰ is a question of law.

The following questions have been held to be mixed questions of law and fact :

- (1) Whether an alteration in a document is 'material' or not.¹¹

However, where the law and its application are clear and the only question relates to facts and their proof, the finding will be a finding of fact.¹⁷

48. Abandonment.—Abandonment is a question depending on the nature of evidence adduced in each case.¹ It is largely a question of fact in the sense that the lower Court's inference for or against abandonment will not, ordinarily, be interfered with in second appeal.² But the High Court can always consider the propriety of the lower Court's inference from the facts established by evidence.³ And such a question, viz., whether the facts found warrant the inference of abandonment, will be a question of law.⁴

49. Foreign law.—What a foreign law is on any particular point is a question of fact.¹

50. Acquisition of easement and customary rights of privacy.—A finding as to the acquisition of a right of easement¹ or as to the infringement mentioned above, then the High Court cannot entertain a second appeal on the finding. The findings need not be concurrent.¹¹ The fact that the trial Court and the lower appellate Court have differed on the point is immaterial;¹² nor would the fact that the finding has been based by the lower Appellate Court on additional evidence recorded by it,¹³ or on evidence treated as inadmissible by the trial Court,¹⁴ give the High Court a right to interfere with it. Further, though the lower Appellate Court should not (ordinarily) reject witnesses accepted by the trial Court in respect of credibility, still the fact that it has rejected witnesses accepted by the trial Court will be no ground for interference on a question of fact, when the lower Appellate Court has given satisfactory reasons for doing so.¹⁵ It has also been held that if a finding of fact given by the trial Court has not been challenged in the first appeal, it cannot be challenged in second appeal on any ground.¹⁶

53. Finding of facts, when not binding in second appeal. — As observed in Notes 2 and 52 above, Sections 100 and 101 prohibit the entertainment of a second appeal on the ground of an error on a question of fact. But where in the process of arriving at the finding of fact the lower Appellate Court has committed an error of law such as has been referred to in Notes 13 to 20 or has adopted an erroneous or defective procedure such as has been referred to in Notes 23 to 27 above, the finding of fact will be open to attack on the ground of such error or defect.¹ Thus, a finding of fact can be

Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows : "A litigant who seeks before a second appellate tribunal to reverse findings of fact which have been arrived at by the trial judge and have, after consideration, been confirmed on appeal, comes always with a very heavy burden upon his shoulders."

The circumstance that the lower Appellate Court and the trial Court, in arriving at the same conclusion, have not been influenced by the same considerations, will not detract from the binding nature of the concurrent finding.⁸ But if the lower Appellate Court does not deal with the question and fails to give independent opinion thereon, then the finding is not "concurrent."

55. New case — General. — Parties are bound by the case which arises on their pleadings and which has been enquired into by the trial Court.¹ They should not be allowed to depart from the facts and grounds of relief originally pleaded by them,² or to change their case and present it in an entirely new shape.³ If there is any defect in their case it is not the function of the High Court to remedy it.⁴ Consequently, a new plea not being one of pure law, which is inconsistent with,⁵ or different from,⁶ the one set up in the Courts below, will not be allowed in second appeal.

Even in the case of new pleas which are in the nature of additional pleas, the rule is that the parties are not entitled to relief on facts or grounds not stated in their pleadings, and unless upon very strong grounds, or under very circumstances, a party will not be allowed to urge them in second appeal. The same principle will apply even if the new plea is in the nature of an alternative pleading out of the lower Appellate Court's decision. However, it has been held that it will be doing an injustice to the party to deny him a right to which he is entitled on that basis. A new prayer may, however, be allowed if it naturally follows from the findings of the lower Appellate Court, but not if it would change the nature of the suit. A prayer for consequential relief may also be allowed if laid down —

- (1) A point or objection not raised in the Courts below or in the grounds of appeal—that is, as to which the respondent has had no notice that it is going to be urged—will not be allowed to be argued in second appeal.¹⁶ (In this connexion, vide Note 56 infra.)
- (2) A point or objection which, if it had been taken in the first instance, could have been cured or met by the other side adopting a course of action which is not open to him at the stage of second appeal, will not be allowed.¹⁷
- (3) A new point or objection involving fresh investigation on facts will not be allowed.¹⁸ (In this connexion, vide Notes 58, 59 and 60.)

In Ram Kinker Rai v. Dufani Ali, a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has held that a point not taken in the Court below, whether the omission is by the appellant in that Court, or whether the respondent failed to support his decree by taking the point, will not be permitted to be raised, except possibly—

- (i) where the point may be described as involving a question of public policy, e. g.,
 (1) involving jurisdiction,
 (2) involving the principle of res judicata,
 (3) when the decision of the point would prevent future litigation;
 (ii) where the plaintiff discloses no cause of action, or the written statement no ground of defence, it is not a ground for permitting a new point to be argued merely because—

- (1) it was omitted by oversight in the Court below, or
 (2) the materials are all on record and the answer to the point is plain.¹⁹
 The Full Bench decision does not however preclude the Court itself from deciding the case on such new point.²⁰

The following are some of the objections which under the principles stated above, were not allowed to be raised for the first time in second appeal :—

- (1) Objections to the admission of evidence²¹ or to the reception of secondary evidence²² unless such objection is one which could not have been cured even in the first instance.²³ Further, an erroneous omission to object to evidence in the trial Court will not make an irrelevant evidence relevant in second appeal.²⁴

- (2) Objections to reception,²⁵ proof²⁶ and admissibility²⁷ of documents. But an objection to the admissibility of a document on the ground of want of deed was registered or not—Plea cannot be raised in second appeal.)

58. Plea going to the root of the case.—It follows from what has been said in Note 56 above that a plea of law which goes to the root of a case can be taken up even for the first time in second appeal,¹ if it arises from the evidence on record² and does not depend on other facts or further enquiry on facts.³ But such a plea will not necessarily be allowed in all cases. Where the objection is one which, if it had been taken in the lower Courts, might have been cured, it will not be allowed to be taken for the first time in second appeal.⁴ Thus, a plea of want of cause of action which is merely technical and capable of being cured if the objection had been taken in the lower Courts cannot be allowed to be raised in second appeal.⁵ But where the plea is one which is fundamental and incurable, it can be allowed to be raised for the first time in second appeal.⁶ Thus, an objection that the appellant in the lower Appellate

But even a plea which could be raised for the first time in second appeal cannot be heard at the hearing of the appeal unless it has been set out in the memorandum of appeal or unless the Court grants leave under O. 41 R. 2.⁵

Where an objection on the ground of limitation was taken in the trial Court but the issue was found against, and the High Court remanded the case without passing any judgment on that issue, it was held that where the case came upon second appeal again, the question of limitation could be gone into.⁶

An objection that the second appeal is barred by limitation can be raised at the hearing, if the appeal had been admitted ex parte.⁷

61. Plea abandoned or waived is barred.— It has been seen in Sections 9 and 21 ante that no amount of consent by parties can give jurisdiction and that there can be no waiver or abandonment of such a plea.¹ Where, however, a plea whether of fact or of law is one which could be waived or abandoned and is so abandoned, it cannot be raised again in second appeal.² Whether a plea has been abandoned or waived has to be gathered from the conduct of the party in the Courts below.³ Thus, where points taken in the pleadings or in the memorandum of first appeal are not pressed in the trial

Court or in the lower Appellate Court, as the case may be,⁴ or where parties conduct the case in the lower Courts as if certain facts are admitted,⁵ or where the findings of the trial Court are not challenged in the first Appellate Court,⁶ such points will be taken to be abandoned or waived and cannot be raised in second appeal. Similarly, objections as to the admissibility or exclusion of evidence if not raised in the trial Court or in the lower Appellate Court cannot be raised in second appeal.⁷ But the mere fact that the lower Appellate Court has not referred to a certain point does not necessarily mean that the point was abandoned.⁸

62. Who may appeal and who may not.—The matter has been fully discussed in Notes 6, 7 and 8 of Section 96 ante. The questions as to who may and who may not prefer a second appeal will be governed by the same principles.

63. Remand.—Where, in appeal from an order of remand the High Court determines a question of law, the decision of the question will be final for all purposes and in any appeal that may be subsequently made to the High Court.¹ See also O. 41, Rr. 23 and 25.

64. Ex parte appellate decree is subject to second appeal.—Under the Code of 1859 there was a conflict of views on the question whether a second appeal lay against ex parte decrees passed in first appeals. Some decisions held that the only remedy was to proceed under Section 119 of the said Code (corresponding to O. 9 R. 13 of the present Code).¹ Others held that a second appeal was also competent.² This conflict has been set at rest by the last paragraph of Section 534 of the Code of 1882 re-embodied as sub-section (2) to Section 100 and there is now no doubt that a second appeal from an ex parte appellate decree is competent.³

2. Suits of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes.—Every suit is of a small cause nature except those that are excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes, by the second schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887.¹ The test therefore for finding out whether a particular suit is or is not of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes is to see whether it is excepted under that schedule.² Where it is not so excepted and the value of the suit is less than Rs. 500, no second appeal will lie from the decree.³ It is the character of the suit as originally framed and presented to the Court that will determine the nature of the suit,⁴ and not the defence which may be set up,⁵ or the character which it may assume in the course of, and after the trial by operation of findings by the Court.⁶ As to in which the suit is originally brought must be whether the value of the suit is less than Rs. 500 or not is to be determined on the allegations in the plaint¹ and not upon the nature of the defence pleaded or of the relief granted.² The mere fact that a Small Cause Court returns a plaint under Section 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, to be presented to another Court on the ground that it involves a question of title will not alter the nature of the suit for the purposes of this section.³ Nor would the nature of the suit be affected by the fact that the Small Cause Court decides a question of title incidentally raised.⁴

If a claim is partly within the jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts and partly within the jurisdiction of the regular Courts, the plaintiff is entitled to file a suit in the regular Courts,⁵ but a collateral claim to which the plaintiff is not entitled, but asked for in the plaint will not deprive the suit of the character of a small cause.⁶

3. Effect of trying small cause suits as ordinary suits. — If instead of trying a small cause suit in a summary way it is tried in the ordinary manner as a regular suit, the mistake will not alter the character of the suit which will nevertheless be subject to all the incidents of a small cause suit.⁷ Therefore no decree or order in such a suit will admit of a second appeal.⁸

6. Suits for contribution.—Two classes of suits for contribution have been excepted from the cognizance of Courts of Small Causes by Articles 41 and 42 of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887—

- (1) suit by a co-sharer in joint property or by a member of an undivided family for contribution in respect of money paid by him on account of the property or family,⁵ and
- (2) suit by a co-mortgagor who has redeemed the property, for contribution from his co-mortgagors.⁶

All other suits for contribution are small causes. For such suits, see the under-mentioned cases.⁷ It should be remembered that contribution implies the existence of a

8. Suits for maintenance. — See also Article 38 of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, IX of 1887.

Before the date of the present Act, suits for maintenance based on a contract or bond or family arrangement or agreement, could be brought as a small cause.¹ Such a suit will now be barred under Article 38 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, whether the maintenance is claimed under a will or by agreement or on a personal obligation.² But if the right to maintenance has been recognized and does not arise for determination, a claim for arrears will be a suit for money and hence a small cause.³ A suit must, if it is to be excepted under Art. 38 of the Small Cause Courts Act from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes, be in substance a suit for maintenance.⁴ Thus, a suit by a guardian of a minor's person against the property guardian for the amount payable to the minor for his maintenance can be brought in a Small Cause Court, as the payment is from his own property.⁵

9. Suits relating to marriage. — Suits for compensation for breach of contract of betrothal or promise of marriage are not cognizable by Small Cause Courts and are excluded expressly by Art. 35 of the Act IX of 1887. The word "compensation" denotes loss sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the articles got ready for the marriage being wasted or damaged, and denotes also the costs of presents or ornaments. It has the same meaning as in Section 73, Contract Act, 1872, and includes a suit for return of presents or ornaments given in contemplation of marriage.⁶

18. Appeal from order of remand in suits of small cause nature.—No appeal lies against an order of remand made in a suit of a small cause nature.¹ This is also indicated by O. 43 R. I (u) which enacts that an appeal will lie from an order of remand only when an appeal will lie from the decree of the Appellate Court. The undermentioned cases² are no longer law in view of the said provision in the new Code.

19. Appeal from order of review in suits of small cause nature.—Where an Appellate Court passes a decree on review in a suit of a small cause nature, no second appeal lies against that decree on the merits though an appeal will lie against the order granting the review under O. 43 R. I (w) and O. 47 R. I.¹

20. Other cases.—For other cases, see the several Articles in Schedule II of Act IX of 1887 and the undermentioned cases.¹

103. [New.] In any second appeal, the High Court may, if the evidence on the record is sufficient, determine any issue of fact necessary for the disposal of the appeal² which has not been determined by such lower Appellate Court or which has been wrongly determined by such Court by reason of any illegality, omission, error or defect such as is referred to in sub-section (1) of section 100.

But where the question of trust arises only collaterally or incidentally, the suit will thereby be taken out of the category of small causes.¹ The mere fact that money claimed by the plaintiff is as trustee does not make it a suit relating to trust.² The undermentioned cases³ are illustrations of cases of trust excluded from the cognizance of Small Cause Courts.

Where the lower Appellate Court did determine an issue of fact but it was vitiated by an illegality such as an improper admission or exclusion of evidence, etc., there was a conflict of decisions as to whether the High Court could itself determine the issue of fact.⁵ The amendment of 1926 now makes it clear that the High Court can itself determine the issue of fact, under the said circumstances.⁶ The Calcutta High Court, however, has held in the undermentioned decisions⁷ that where the lower Appellate Court has relied on inadmissible evidence as also other evidence in arriving at its finding, the High Court has, generally, no power to decide whether the evidence other than that which has been improperly admitted warrants the finding of the lower Court and that the proper course for the High Court in such cases is to remand the case to the lower Court. No reference is made in the above decisions to the amendment of this Section in 1926 and it is submitted that they cannot be accepted as correct.

Synopsis

- 1. Amendments subsequent to 1908.
- 2. Scope and object of the Section.

1. Amendments subsequent to 1908. — The words "which has not been determined Section 100" were substituted by Act VI of 1926 for the words "but not determined by the lower Appellate Court." See Note 2 below.

2. Scope and object of the Section. — This Section enables the High Court in second appeal to determine a question of fact, if there is sufficient evidence on the record, in two cases —

- (1) where the lower Appellate Court has failed to determine an issue of fact, and
- (2) where it has determined an issue of fact wrongly by reason of any illegality, omission, error or defect referred to in sub-section (1) of Section 100.

There was no such provision in the old Code. It was therefore held that though the lower Appellate Court had not determined an issue of fact and though there was sufficient evidence on the record, the High Court could not itself determine it but could only remand the case for such determination.¹ The present Section negatives this view and enables the High Court to determine the issue itself in such cases.² This power applies also to cases where a case is remanded under O. 41 R. 25 and the lower Appellate Court fails to give the findings or its findings are incomplete.³ But where the necessary finding has actually been given it cannot be said that it was not given merely because a correct issue was not framed.⁴

As the Section stood before its amendment by Act VI of 1926, the High Court could determine any issue of fact necessary which had not been determined by the lower Appellate Court.

Where the lower Appellate Court did determine an issue of fact but it was vitiated by an illegality such as an improper admission or exclusion of evidence, etc., there was a conflict of decisions as to whether the High Court could itself determine the issue of fact.⁵ The amendment of 1926 now makes it clear that the High Court can itself determine the issue of fact, under the said circumstances.⁶ The Calcutta High Court, however, has held in the undermentioned decisions⁷ that where the lower Appellate Court has relied on inadmissible evidence as also other evidence in arriving at its finding, the High Court has, generally, no power to decide whether the evidence other than that which has been improperly admitted warrants the finding of the lower Court and that the proper course for the High Court in such cases is to remand the case to the lower Court. No reference is made in the above decisions to the amendment of this Section in 1926 and it is submitted that they cannot be accepted as correct.

APPEALS FROM ORDERS

104. [S. 588, para. 2.] (1) An appeal shall lie from the following orders, and save as otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any law for the time being in force,⁸ from no other orders:—

- (a) an order superseding an arbitration¹⁰ where the award has not been completed within the period allowed by the Court;

1. Legislative changes. — This Section induces some material changes in the law as laid down in Section 588 of the old Code.¹

1. The words "save as otherwise . . . in force" are new (See Notes 4, 5 and 6 below).

2. Clause (i) of Section 588 of the old Code providing for an appeal against an order under Section 20 of the old Code is omitted as that Section itself has been omitted.
3. Clause (17) of the old Code dealing with orders in insolvency proceedings has been omitted, as provisions have been made therefor in the Provincial Insolvency Act.
4. Sub-section (2) repealing the last paragraph of the old Section makes it clear that what is prohibited is only a right of further appeal and not a right of revision or review.
5. Clause (ff) and the proviso to the Section have been newly added to the Section by Act IX of 1922.

2. Scope and applicability of the Section. — The Section is restrictive in character. By sub-section (1) it limits a party's right of appeal against an order to the cases specified in clauses (a) to (i) and by sub-section (2) that right is further restricted to only one appeal.

Where an order is one not specified in the Section but is a "decree" within the meaning of Section 2 clause (2) of the Code,³ or a right of appeal therefrom is expressly provided for elsewhere in the Code or by any other law for the time being in force,⁴ this Section will, of course, have no application. Where, however, an order is one specified in this Section, and is also appealable as a "decree" or under other express provision of law, it has been held that the right of appeal is governed only by the provisions of this Section, and that consequently no second appeal will lie in such cases.

Illustration

A applied under the Code of 1882 for setting aside an execution sale on the ground of fraud. His application was dismissed. An appeal against that order was also dismissed; held that a second appeal lay. The reason is that under the old Code an order refusing to set aside an execution sale on the ground of fraud was not appealable under Section 588 clause (16) (now O. 43 R. (1) but was a "decree" under Section 244 (now Section 47), and therefore a second appeal lay.⁴

Suppose a similar application is made under the new Code which provides for an appeal against an order refusing to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud also. Such an order is appealable under Section 104 and O. 43 R. 1 as an order and therefore no second appeal will lie, though the order may be one within Section 47.⁵ It may here be noted that a decree as defined by Section 2 excludes an order appealable as an order even though it is within Section 47.⁶

The Section being a disabling one must, under general principles of interpretation, be construed strictly.

3. Retrospective effect.—A disabling provision of law such as this Section cannot be so interpreted as to have a retrospective effect.¹ This is also expressly made clear by Section 154 of the Code which saves rights of appeal accrued before the commencement of this Code.

4. Non-appealable orders.—No appeal lies from any order except as provided for by this Section. In other words, orders [not being "decrees" within Section 2 (2)] not falling within clauses (a) to (i) of this Section nor within O. 43 R. 1 are not appealable.¹

5. "Save as otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any law for the time being in force."—These words are new. The former Code did not provide any exception as to orders under other laws, such as the Letters Patent, the Guardians and Wards Act, etc., which contain provisions as to rights of appeal against orders passed thereunder. And there was consequently a conflict of opinion as to which provision was to prevail.⁴

This defect has now been remedied by the introduction of the saving clause. 6. Letters Patent Appeals.—The conflict referred to in the previous Note arose chiefly in connexion with Letters Patent Appeals.

Under the Letters Patent orders are appealable when they come within the definition of the word "judgment."¹ The High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay held that such appeals were not barred by Section 558 clause 16² following the decision of the Privy Council in Irish Chunder v. Kali Sundari.³ The Allahabad High Court took a contrary view distinguishing the said Privy Council case.⁴

The introduction of the saving clause as already mentioned sets at rest the conflict of views and it is now clear that an appeal may lie from an order under the Letters Patent, although such order may be unappealable under this Section.⁵

The Allahabad High Court has, however, held even in a case under the new Code that Section 104 would bar an appeal under the Letters Patent if the order appealed against is unappealable under Section 104.⁶ The decision simply purports to follow the Full Bench case of *Mohammed v. Ishanullah*⁷ which was a case under the old Code and makes no reference to the change of the law in the Code. The decision does not seem to be a sound one.

Suppose, now, that A prefers an appeal under this Section to the High Court from an order appealable under this Section, and the High Court passes a judgment therein. Does a further or second appeal lie against that judgment on the ground that it is also a "judgment" within the meaning of the Letters Patent? In an earlier decision of the Allahabad High Court it was held that in such a case no further appeal will lie.⁸ The decision was based on the ground that sub-section (2) of Section 104 expressly bars such an appeal and there is no saving clause such as has been inserted in sub-section (1). But this view has been dissented from in a recent decision of the Allahabad High Court⁹ which proceeds on the ground that by virtue of the provisions of Section 4 ante, the right of appeal under the Letters Patent is unaffected by Section 104 sub-section 2.

7. Execution proceedings.—Orders passed in execution proceedings, though in many cases fall within Section 47 of the Code, may in some cases fall outside its scope, e. g., orders passed on objections by third parties to attachment or delivery of possession in execution of decrees.¹

Where an order in execution is specified as appealable under this Section, then, as has been seen already,² there will be only one appeal notwithstanding the fact that the order falls also within the scope of Section 2 (2) of the Code.

Where an order in execution neither falls under Section 47 nor is specified in this Section, then there will be no appeal at all.³

An appeal against an order in execution which is appealable under this Section is not barred by the mere fact that the order is only a preliminary one, and that a final order has been passed at the time of appeal.⁴

8. Appeals to Privy Council.—Sub-section (1) saves rights of appeal "expressly provided in the body of this Code." Section 109 which gives a right of appeal to the Privy Council from certain decrees and final orders is one of such provisions, and consequently this Section does not govern appeals to the Privy Council.¹

9. Revision or review.—As has already been seen in Note 1 above, the restriction in sub-section (2) is to prevent only a further appeal and not to bar a right of revision or review. The word "final" which had been used in the last paragraph of Section 588 of the old Code was held not to bar a right of review or revision.² The possibility of any doubt in this matter has now been removed by the insertion of the words "No appeal shall lie from any order passed in appeal under this Section" in sub-section (2).

10. Order superseding arbitration—Clause (a).—The order of supersession, in order to be appealable, must be one based on the ground mentioned in the clause, namely that the award was not completed within the period allowed by the Court. An order of supersession, therefore, on any other ground (e. g., refusal of the arbitrators to act) is not within this Section.² This clause applies only to an order superseding an award; it does not apply to an order refusing to supersede an award.³ The clause does not apply to an order refusing to file an award.⁴

11. Order on award stated as special case—Clause (b).—For the statement of a special case by the arbitrators, see Paragraph 11 of Schedule II. An award cannot be said to be stated in the form of a special case, where the arbitrators take the opinion of the Court after submitting their own opinions.¹

12. Order modifying or correcting an award—Clause (c).—This clause is new. As to the circumstances under which awards can be modified or corrected, see Paragraph 12, Schedule II.

The right of appeal exists only where the award is modified or corrected.¹ Thus, a disallowance of costs allowed by the award,² an amendment of the award³ and an interpolation in the award by the arbitrators after the same is signed,⁴ are all modifications or corrections of the award and an appeal will therefore lie.⁵

The whole award cannot, however, be called into question, but only the portions modified or corrected.⁶

The clause confers a right of appeal against an order modifying or correcting an award and it is in respect of such order that a second appeal is prohibited under sub-section 2. But, where an appeal is filed against the decree passed in accordance with the modified award, a second appeal will lie.⁷

13. Order filing or refusing to file agreement to refer to arbitration—Clause (d).—See also Para. 17 of Schedule II. This clause is new. Under the old Code, there was a conflict of views whether such an order was appealable.¹ The present

Code clearly allows an appeal therefrom. This clause applies only to agreements to refer disputes about which no suit is pending. An application to file an agreement to refer a dispute pendente lite is outside the scope of this Section, and is not appealable under this clause.²

Again, the order must be one filing or refusing to file the agreement. An order neither rejecting nor accepting the agreement but declaring it invalid is not one within this Section.³ Refusal to file an agreement need not necessarily be on merits; it may be on the preliminary question of jurisdiction.⁴

14. Order staying or refusing to stay suit—Clause (e).—The order referred to in this clause is the one passed under Paragraph 18 of Schedule II. Even where the Court refuses to stay on the ground that there was no agreement, this clause has been held to apply.¹

But the orders must have been passed under the Second Schedule of the Code. An order under Section 9 of the Arbitration Act is not appealable under this clause.²

15. Order filing or refusing to file private award—Clause (f).—This clause is new and refers to orders passed under Paragraph 21 of Schedule II. It does not apply to proceedings under Section 11 of the Arbitration Act.¹ Under the old Code there was a conflict of authorities as to whether such an order was appealable as a decree and as to what the procedure was when an objection was raised to the filing of an award without the intervention of the Court.² The present clause sets the conflict at rest by expressly making the order appealable.³

The right of appeal is not taken away by the fact that a decree has been passed in pursuance of the award,⁴ or that the filing of the award and the decree were both passed by the same order,⁵ or that the decree passed in accordance with the award has to be set aside.⁶

But the right of appeal under this clause is distinct from the right of appeal against the decree passed in pursuance of the award.⁷

When the Court simply passes a decree in accordance with the award without specifically passing any order allowing or disallowing the objections thereto, it will be deemed to be an order filing the award⁸ and the appeal against the decree will be treated as an appeal against the order.⁹ An order rejecting an award on the ground of misconduct of the arbitrators is not one filing or refusing to file an award and is not within the Section.¹⁰ Similarly, an order remitting an award for making a fresh award in accordance with the agreement of reference is not a final order of refusal to file an award and is not appealable, as this clause refers only to final orders.¹¹

This clause applies only to arbitration without the intervention of the Court.¹² There is a conflict of views as to whether it applies to a refusal to file an award under the Arbitration Act though the same may be without the intervention of the Court. The Calcutta and Lahore High Courts and the Lower Burma Chief Court and the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court hold that this clause refers only to proceedings under Para. 20 and other Paragraphs of the Second Schedule of the Code,¹³ while the Allahabad High Court holds that the application of the clause is not so limited.¹⁴

16. Order under Section 35A—Clause (H).—This clause, the proviso to Section 104 clause (1), and Section 35A were newly introduced by Act IX of 1922.

17. Order under Section 95—Clause (G).—Section 558 of the old Code provided for an appeal against an order for compensation under Section 497 for obtaining an injunction on insufficient grounds, and not for obtaining an improper arrest or attachment, and there was a conflict of opinion as to whether an appeal lay from an order of improper attachment.¹ The present Section read with Section 95 now shows no appeal shall lie from any order made by a Court in the exercise of its original or appellate jurisdiction; but, where a decree is appealed from,⁴ any error, defect or irregularity⁵ in any order,³ affecting the decision of the case,⁶ may be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal.

105. [S. 591.] (1) Save as otherwise expressly provided,³

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), where any party aggrieved by an order of remand made after the commencement of this Code from which an appeal lies does not appeal therefrom, he shall thereafter be precluded from disputing its correctness.

1. Legislative changes. —

1. Section 591 of the old Code contained the words "any such order" after the word "irregularity." This gave rise to a contention that the Section was applicable to non-appealable orders only. That contention was negatived by the Privy Council.¹ The word "such" has now been omitted in order to make this view clear.
 2. Sub-section (2) is new. See Note 8 infra.
 The above alterations do not effect any material changes in the law as it stood before.²

2. Scope and object of the Section. — Under Section 96, every decree is appealable save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of the Code or by any other law for the time being in force. No order is, however, appealable except those specified in Section 101. Section 105 enacts that every order whether appealable or not, except an order of remand, can be attacked in an appeal from the final decree on the ground —

(1) that there is an error, defect or irregularity in the order; and

(2) that such error, defect or irregularity affects the decision of the case.

In Moheshur Singh v. The Bengal Government,² the Privy Council observed as follows :

"We are not aware of any law or regulation prevailing in India which renders it imperative upon the author to appeal from every interlocutory order, by which he may conceive himself aggrieved, under the penalty, if he does not do so, of forfeiting for ever the benefit of the consideration of the Appellate Court. No authority or precedent has been cited in support of such a proposition, and we cannot conceive that anything would be more detrimental to the expeditious administration of justice than the establishment of a rule which would impose upon the suitor the necessity of so appealing; whereby, on the one hand he might be harassed with endless expense and delay and on the other inflict upon his opponent similar calamities."

"This is the principle on which the Section has been based.³ As has been mentioned already, this Section applies to appealable⁴ as well as to non-appealable⁵ orders.

This Section and Section 99 are not mutually destructive as the latter Section deals only with an error, defect or irregularity not affecting the merits of the case while this Section deals with any error, etc., affecting the decision of the case.⁶

3. Order must be one under the Code. — The word "order" in the Section refers to orders passed under the Code.¹ The words "save as otherwise expressly provided" contemplate appeals from orders of a character provided for elsewhere than in the Civil Procedure Code and include appeals allowed under other laws.²

4. "Where a decree is appealed from." — It is only where the erroneous or defective order has been passed by the very Court by which the decree appealed from has been passed that the order can be attacked in the appeal. Thus, an erroneous order of remand passed by an Appellate Court cannot be attacked in an appeal from a decree of the trial Court passed on such remand.¹ There is a conflict of opinion as to whether an appeal will lie from a decree where the only ground of appeal is the defect, error or irregularity of an order made in the suit. The High Courts of Bombay,² Calcutta³ and Madras⁴ have held that such an appeal will lie. The High Court of Allahabad has held in the undermentioned cases⁵ a contrary view. In a recent case, however, the same High Court has expressed the same view as that of the other High Courts.⁶

The ground of objection must be set out in the memorandum of appeal, otherwise it will not be entertained at the hearing of the appeal.⁷

The principle of this Section would apply not only to decrees and interlocutory orders but also to orders and interlocutory orders which lead up to the final order.⁸ In the undermentioned case,⁹ however, the Allahabad High Court took a contrary view and held that it is only when a decree is appealed from that prior orders passed by the Court from whose decree the appeal has been passed can be questioned. It is submitted that in view of the express provisions of Section 108 clause (b) infra, the above decision does not seem to be correct.

5. Error, defect or irregularity. — The error, defect or irregularity referred to in the Section must be one in law or procedure and not in matters of fact.¹

6. "Affecting the decision of the case." — An error, defect or irregularity in any order may be raised as a ground of objection in an appeal from the decree if such error, etc., should have affected the decision of the case.¹ The words "affecting order setting aside an abatement does not affect the decision of the case whether it was made simultaneously or not.³⁰ As to whether an order refusing to set aside an abatement affects the decision of the case on the merits, see foot-note (11) above.

The High Court of Rangoon has held that the words "affecting the decision of the case" cannot be read as meaning "affecting the decision of the case on the merits."³¹ It has been held by the High Courts of Bombay and Calcutta that an order under O. 22 R. 5 imploding a person as the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff does not affect the decision of the case and cannot be challenged in an appeal from the final decree.³² The High Court of Madras took a contrary view in the undermentioned case,³³ but in a later case³⁴ has taken the same view as that of the Bombay High Court.

7. Compliance with order is no bar to questioning it in appeal. — A compliance with the directions contained in an interlocutory order does not deprive a party from objecting to it in an appeal against the final decree.¹ Nor does the dismissal of an appeal against an order which is non-appealable take away that right.²

8. Effect of not appealing against order of remand. — Orders of remand can be divided into two classes —

(1) appealable orders of remand, for which see Order 41 Rule 23 and Order 43 Rule 1 (u); and

(2) orders of remand which are not appealable, for which see O. 41 R. 25.

As regards the latter they stand on the same footing as any other order and can be challenged in the appeal from the final decree.¹ As regards the former, it was held under the old Code that the order could be challenged in an appeal from the final decree though no appeal had been preferred against the order itself.² Under the present Code this has been expressly negatived by the addition of sub-section (2), the policy of the Legislature being to treat an order of remand as a special case³ and to give a finality to it.⁴ Where, therefore, an appealable order of remand has not been appealed against, the propriety or correctness thereof or of any of the incidental affects decision of case.)

findings and decisions which are a material part of the basis of that order⁶ cannot be challenged in an appeal from the final decree, or by the lower Court.⁷ To prevent obvious injustice, however, the High Court can refuse to be bound by a remand order of a subordinate Court though neither party can question it by reason of their not having been appealed therefrom.⁸

It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad⁹ that this Section deals with orders which the Court had jurisdiction to make, but in the making of which it had committed an error or irregularity and that, therefore, an order of remand passed without jurisdiction is outside sub-section (2) and open to question in an appeal from the final decree.

A failure to appeal from the order of remand does not affect the right of appeal from the final decision on remand.¹⁰

9. Privy Council appeals.—Sub-section (2) of this Section does not apply to appeals to the Privy Council.¹¹ But the principle of sub-section (1) will apply to appeals to the Privy Council also.¹²

10. Letters Patent appeals.—Clause 15 of the Letters Patent is not controlled by Section 105 of the Code and an order of remand, though not appealed against, can be challenged in a Letters Patent appeal against the final judgment.¹³ For a full discussion, see Note 6 to Section 104.

11. Order granting review.—An order granting review is appealable under O. 43 R. 1 (w). But it is appealable only on the grounds mentioned in O. 47 R. 7. It follows that under this Section, read with O. 47 R. 7, the order can be challenged in an appeal from the final decree only on the grounds specified in O. 47 R. 7.¹⁴

12. Revision of orders that can be challenged under the Section.—Where an interlocutory order can be challenged in an appeal from the final decree under this Section, the High Court will not, as a rule, interfere in revision¹ but in the exercise of its powers of superintendence the High Court may interfere in proper cases in order to avoid irreparable injury being caused.²

106. [S. 589.] Where an appeal from any order is allowed it shall lie to the Court to which an appeal would lie from the decree in the suit in which such order was made, or where such order is made by a Court (not being a High Court) in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, then to the High Court.

What Courts to hear appeals.

[1877, S. 589.]

1. Scope of the Section.—This Section provides that appeals from orders in cases in which they are appealable, shall lie to the Court to which an appeal would lie from the decree in the suit in which the order was made. The appellate jurisdiction of the District Judge, for instance, extends under the various Civil Courts Acts to decree in suits of the value of Rs. 5,000 and less. Hence, where the value of the subject-matter of the suit does not exceed Rs. 5,000, the appeal from the order lies to the District Judge and where the value of the suit exceeds Rs. 5,000 the appeal lies to the High Court, because the forum of appeal in regard to the decree passed in the suit is determinable in like manner.¹ But where the order appealed from is passed by a Court in exercise of appellate jurisdiction, the appeal lies to the High Court.²

The following cases decided under the previous Code in regard to appeals from orders in insolvency are only of academic interest as the chapter relating to insolvency has been removed from the Civil Procedure Code.³

Other Topics (miscellaneous)

1. Legislative changes.—Sub-section (1) is new. Sub-section (2) corresponds to the first clause of the first part of Section 582 of the Code of 1882.

2. Scope and object of the Section.—Sub-section (1) specifies the powers conferred on an Appellate Court in order to enable it to dispose of a case completely and effectively. The powers themselves are mentioned in clauses (a) to (d) and the conditions and limitations subject to which such powers are to be exercised are prescribed in the First Schedule. See Notes 4 to 7 below.

Sub-section (2) provides that an Appellate Court shall have the same powers as those of the original Court under this Code and thereby comprehensively makes the relevant provisions of the Code applicable to appeals except such as are specifically excluded. A second Appellate Court has also the same powers and duties as those of the first Appellate Court. See also Section 108.

The powers and duties contemplated in this Section are such as are provided for in the Civil Procedure Code, and not in any other enactment, such as the Limitation Act.

3. "Prescribed."—See Section 2 clauses 16 and 18.
4. Power to determine case finally—Clause (a).—See O. 41 Rr. 4, 24 and 33.
5. Power to remand case — Clause (b).—See Order 41 Rule 23.
6. Power to frame issues and refer them for trial — Clause (c).—See Order 41 Rule 25.
7. Power to take additional evidence—Clause (d).—See O. 41 Rr. 27 and 28.
8. Power to summon witnesses. — See O. 41 Rr. 27 and 28.

9. Appellate Court to exercise the same powers and perform the same duties as original Court — Sub-section (2). — Sub-section (2) is based on the general principle that an Appellate Court has full powers as the original Court, and can do, while the appeal is pending, what the original Court could have done, while the suit was pending. The provisions of the Code relating to incidental proceedings in original Courts are thus equally applicable to an Appellate Court. But they do not apply to cases where the subject which is being dealt with by the Appellate Court is not the actual appeal itself. The words "as nearly as may be" mean, so far as may be necessary, to carry into effect the requisite reliefs. See also Notes 10 to 30 below.

10. "Powers," meaning of.—The word "powers" is not synonymous with "jurisdiction" but comprehends the authority to carry out such of the functions as are indicated in Notes 12 to 30 below.

The decisions of the English and American Courts on the functions of an Appellate Court are to be followed with great caution in India as they are based on practice and procedure of a highly technical character. See also Section 151.

11. Inherent Powers.—Every Court trying civil causes has inherent jurisdiction to take cognizance of questions cutting at the root of the subject-matter in controversy, and, in fact, such powers should be exercised in order to meet the ends of justice although there may be no direct statutory provision therefor. Thus, an Appellate Court has inherent powers to add, as a party respondent or allow to figure as an appellant a person who was not a party to the suit.

12. Competence of the Appellate Court to interfere with the discretion of the Court below.—Ordinarily a Court of appeal will not interfere with the exercise of discretion by the lower Court and substitute for it its own discretion. Nor can the Appellate Court lay down any rules with a view to indicate the particular groove in which the discretion of the lower Court should run.

- (16) AIR 1916 Cal 564 (566) (FB).
- (14) AIR 1914 Cal 314 (318). (Appointment of a guardian to a minor.)

An interference, however, will be justified in the following cases —

- (1) where the lower Court acts arbitrarily or perversely or capriciously³ or in disregard of sound legal principles;⁴
- (2) where the discretion has been exercised where it ought not to have been exercised;⁵
- (3) where the Judge misdirects himself by wrongly assuming that there is no general rule to guide him in the exercise of his discretion;⁶ or
- (4) where the discretion which is vested in the Judge and which ought in law he is to exercise has not been exercised at all.⁷

The mere possibility of the Appellate Court coming to a different conclusion on the same facts and evidence will not justify interference.⁸ See also Note 14 below.

13. Powers of the Appellate Court in matters of evidence.—An Appellate Court will not interfere with the decision of the lower Court as to admissibility of evidence¹ except to prevent a clear miscarriage of justice.² But the question of the relevancy of evidence is always open to reconsideration in appeal.³ See also Note 14 below.

14. Appreciation of evidence by the Appellate Court. — Where the appreciation of oral testimony is concerned, the Appellate Court has to reconcile two conflicting view-points, namely, on the one hand, the undoubted duty of the Court of appeal to review the recorded evidence and to draw its own inferences and conclusions, and, on the other hand, the unquestionable weight which must be attached to the opinion of the Judge of the primary Court who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses and noticing their look and manner.¹ On questions of fact, therefore, largely depending on oral testimony, the conclusions of the trial Judge will not be lightly interfered with.² But this rule should not be treated as having a too general application.³ An Appellate Court is entitled to interfere with questions of fact in the following cases —

15. Failure to consider weight of evidence. — The failure of the Appellate Court to tackle the crucial question between the parties and consider the evidence in the case amounts to a substantial error of procedure.¹ See Section 101, Notes 23 and 24.

16. Power to add, transpose or substitute parties. — An Appellate Court has, under sub-section (2) of this Section, the same power to add,¹ transpose² and substitute parties under the provisions of the Code as a Court of original jurisdiction. See O. 1 R. 10, O. 22 Rr. 3, 4 and 11 and O. 41 Rr. 20 and 33 and Note 11 above and Section 151.

As to whether a person not party to the first appeal can be added in second appeal, see O. 1 R. 10, Note 11 and O. 41 R. 20. Under the old Code, it was doubted in the undermentioned case³ whether Section 27 of that Code corresponding to the present O. 1 R. 10, sub-rule (1) applied to appeals. The doubt was expressed in view of the wording of the old Section 582. In view however of the changes made in the wording of the Section, it is submitted that there can be no doubt about it now.

17. Powers regarding court-fee. — An Appellate Court cannot deal with the appeal until the court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal is paid.¹ Nor can it, in the generality of cases, award an amount in excess of that in respect of which the appeal is brought and court-fee paid.² As to the power of the Appellate Court to entertain an objection as to the valuation of the suit in the original Court, see Section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act of 1887.

18. Power to direct stay of proceedings, grant interim injunctions and pass interlocutory orders. — An Appellate Court having seisin of an appeal has power to pass all such interlocutory orders as are necessary in the interests of justice, such as an order granting an interim injunction,¹ appointing a temporary guardian in a pending appeal from an order of appointment under the Guardians and Wards Act,² or staying further proceedings or execution.³

See also Section 94, Order 41 Rules 5, 6 and 33 and Section 151.

19. Power to entertain application to set aside ex parte decree. — See Section 96 Note 12, Order 41 Rule 21.

20. Power to permit withdrawal of proceedings. — See Order 23 Rule 1.
21. Power to reject plaint or memorandum of appeal. — This Section makes the provisions relating to the rejection of plaints applicable to the memorandum of appeal.¹

22. Power to return memorandum of appeal for presentation to the proper Court.—Section 107 (2) read with O. 7 R. 10 makes it clear that the Appellate Court has the power to return the memorandum of appeal for presentation to the proper Court.¹

23. Power to allow amendment.—See Section 153, O. 1 R. 10, O. 6 R. 17 and O. 41 R. 3 and Note 9.

24. Power to decide new point suo motu.—See Order 41 Rule 2.

25. Power to make new case in appeal.—See Order 41 Rules 2 and 25.

26. Power to interfere with the appointment of a receiver.—An Appellate Court will not ordinarily interfere with the appointment of a receiver except on the ground of infringement of a general principle of law or improper exercise of discretion.¹

See also Note 12 above.

27. Power to refer to arbitration.—An Appellate Court can act under Paragraph 1 of Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, by virtue of Section 107 (2) and refer the matter in dispute in appeal to arbitration.¹ See Schedule II, Paragraph 1.

28. Power to examine ameen.—An Appellate Court has power to send for the ameen and examine him on his report.¹

29. Power to expunge remarks from the judgment.—An Appellate Court would also seem to have the power to expunge remarks in a judgment where the observations are scurrilous, blasphemous, irrelevantly scandalous or indecent.¹

30. Duties of the Appellate Court.—Before an Appellate Court reverses the finding of the lower Court it should apply its mind to a consideration of the whole of the evidence in the case.¹ It should bring on the record all the necessary parties to the appeal.² It should apply correct principles of law³ and give clear findings of fact⁴ and directions free from doubt⁵ and rectify the errors of the lower Court.⁶ It is the duty of the Appellate Court to decide an appeal according to law, giving findings on all the issues decided by the lower Court against the appellant, however small the subject-matter of the appeal may be⁷ unless the appellant waives his objection to the findings against him.⁸

the dismissal of an appeal for default (O. 41 R. 17),⁷ the documents to accompany a memorandum of appeal (O. 41 R. 1),⁸ the power to entertain objections as to misjoinder of causes of action,⁹ the power to entertain cross-objections,¹⁰ and the bringing on the record of legal representatives of deceased parties,¹¹ a Court of second appeal has been held to be governed by rules similar to those applicable to a Court of first appeal. vary an order for execution in such a way as to grant the decree-holder a relief for which he had not asked.¹⁸

3. Appeals from orders.—Where an order recording a compromise under O. 23 R. 3, infra is made with the consent of the parties, the order is not appealable by virtue of Section 96 sub-section 3, read with this Section, even though O. 43 R. 1, infra provides for an appeal against the order.¹⁹

As the provisions relating to appeals from original decrees apply to appeals from orders only "so far as may be," it is not open to the Appellate Court in an appeal from an order of remand under O. 41 R. 23 to enter into the merits of the whole case as in a regular appeal.²⁰ An Appellate Court has inherent jurisdiction to grant an interim injunction pending an appeal from an order refusing temporary injunction.²¹

It is only where a different procedure is not provided by the Code or by any special or local law, that the procedure in an appeal from an order is to be governed by the provisions relating to appeals from original decrees. Thus, the procedure as to appeals from original decrees is not applicable to appeals from orders under the Provincial Insolvency Act, as a special procedure is provided for such matters.²² Likewise, this Section is not applicable to proceedings under the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908).²³

APPEALS TO THE KING IN COUNCIL

109. [S. 595.] Subject to such rules as may, from time to time, be made by His Majesty in Council regarding appeals from the Courts of British India, and to the provisions hereinafter contained, an appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council —

(b) from any decree or final order passed by a High Court²⁸ in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction; and

1. Legislative changes. —
- The following amendments have been introduced in the Section: —
1. In clauses (a) and (b) the words "decree or final order" have been substituted for the words "final decree."
 2. In clause (c) the words "or order" have been added after the word "decree."
- It was enacted by Section 594 of the old Code that the word "decree" for the purposes of this Section meant "judgment or order" so that a "final decree" meant a "final decree or final order." It was also held in cases arising under the corresponding Section of the old Code (i. e., Section 595) that "final decree" included also decisions in the nature of preliminary decrees.

2. Scope and object of the Section. — The right of appeal to the Privy Council is governed by Sections 109, 110, 111 and 112 and O. 45 of the Code, and Clause 39 of the Letters Patent granted to the High Courts of Bombay, Calcutta and Madras and the corresponding Clauses of the Letters Patents granted to the other High Courts.

Sections 109 and 110 enact provisions very similar to the said Clause of the Letters Patent but are wider in their applicability than the Letters Patent. Whereas the Letters Patent only applies to Chartered High Courts, Sections 109 and 110 apply to all "High Courts" as defined by Section 3 (24) of the General Clauses Act² and to other Courts of final appellate jurisdiction. Clause 39 of the Letters Patent must also be read subject to Sections 109 and 110 of the Code.³

Sections 109 to 112 and Clause 39 of the Letters Patent should be read together, and, when so read, the law enacted therein can be briefly summarized as follows: —

(1) An appeal will lie to the Privy Council from any decree or order when, either the case is certified to be a fit one for such appeal [see Section 109 clause (c)] or when special leave is given by the King in Council. (Section 112.)

2. (192) AIR 1932 Oudh 163 (163, 164). (Oudh Chief Court is a High Court for purposes of Section 109.)

3. See Clause 44 of Letters Patent, Calcutta, and the corresponding Clauses in other Letters Patents.

where the suit itself has become non-existent.⁹

(4) Where a right of appeal is barred by the other provisions of the Code or by any special law.—An order granting a review is not appealable except in the cases mentioned in O. 47 R. 7. Section 109 must be read subject to O. 47 R. 7, as is indicated by the words "subject to . . . the provisions hereinafter contained" in the Section, and therefore no appeal will lie from an order by the High Court on review if it is not appealable under O. 47 R. 7.¹⁰ Again, Section 109 will not affect any special law or any special jurisdiction conferred by any other law for the time being in force.¹¹ Where therefore a special law like the Rangoon City Municipal Act enacts that a decree of the High Court under Section 91 (3) of that Act is final in the sense that it is conclusive, a further appeal of any kind is barred and Section 109 will become inapplicable.¹²

In Bhaya Mohammod Azim Khan v. Raja Saadat Ali Khan,¹³ a question arose as to whether an appeal to the Privy Council was competent from a decree of a single Judge of the Oudh Court in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction notwithstanding that under the Oudh Courts Act such decree was appealable to a Bench of the Chief Court itself. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that in such a case the appeal to the Privy Council should be rejected in exercise of the prerogative of His Majesty under Section 112. Their Lordships also expressed the view that Sections 109 and 110 did not prohibit an appeal being brought within the Chief Court in like manner as a Letters Patent Appeal was brought within a Chartered High Court and that the two Sections taken together seemed rather to be intended to provide an appeal to His Majesty on the footing that no further appeal in India was provided.

It was held in the undermentioned cases¹⁴ that an award by a Court under the Land Acquisition Act was not open to an appeal to the Privy Council on the ground that only a special and limited right of appeal was given by that Act from the award of the Court to the High Court. These cases are no longer law since the amendment of Section 54 of that Act by Act XIX of 1921, by which an appeal to the Privy Council is expressly provided for.¹⁵

The right of appeal to the Privy Council is not confined to the King's subject.¹⁶ Subject to the limitations set forth above, an appeal will lie to the Privy Council from any judicial order or decree of a Court, by any person injured or aggrieved by it. Where the petitioner prima facie satisfies the conditions prescribed by this Section, leave to appeal must be granted. The chance of success of the appellant in the proposed appeal is immaterial.¹⁷ See also the undermentioned cases.¹⁸

But in Ramchand Manyimal v. Goverdhandas, A. I. R. 1920 Privy Council 86, a case arising under the present Code, in which the question was whether an order refusing stay of a suit under Section 19 of the Arbitration Act was final or not, Viscount Cave observed :

"The question as to what is a final order was considered by the Court of Appeal in Salaman v. Warner, (1891) 1 Q. B. 734, and that decision was followed in the same Court in the case of Bosson v. Altwicham Urban District Council, (1903) 1 K. B. 547. The effect of those and other judgments is that an order is final if it finally disposes of the rights of the parties. The orders now under appeal do not finally dispose of those rights but leave them to be determined in the ordinary way."

In Abdul Rahiman v. D. K. Cassim and Sons,⁵ after stating that the decisions in I. L. R. 15 Bombay 155 and I. L. R. 17 Allahabad 112 were not applicable to cases arising under the present Section, Sir George Lowndes observed :

"The finality must be a finality in relation to the suit. If after the order the suit is still a live suit in which the rights of the parties have still to be determined no appeal lies against it under Section 109 (a) of the Code. . . . In their Lordships' opinion it is impossible to distinguish the present case from that upon which Lord Cave pronounced. The effect of the order from which it is here sought to appeal was not to dispose of finally the rights of the parties. It no doubt decided an important and even a vital issue in the case but it left the suit alive and provided for its trial in the ordinary way. . . . For these reasons their Lordships think that the appeal is incompetent."

The decision of a cardinal point may in many cases finally dispose of the rights of the parties in the suit; but the test to find out whether an order is a final one is not whether the point decided thereby is a cardinal one, but whether the rights of the parties in the suit are finally disposed of by it.⁶

The mere fact that an order decides one issue on the rights of the parties does not make it a final order if there are other issues left to be decided later on.⁷ Where an order merely gives a direction as to procedure or where it does not dispose of the suit or proceeding but reserves some further question for further determination, it is only an interlocutory and not a final order.⁸

undermentioned decision,¹⁰ the Rangoon High Court has, however, proceeded on the view that a "final order" within the meaning of this Section need not completely dispose of the suit and an appellate order of remand may also under certain circumstances be a "final order." In that case, the Appellate Court held that a certain award was not binding on the persons against whom it had been set up and remanded the case to the lower Court for the investigation of their claims. It was held that this was a "final order" as it finally disposed of the rights of such persons to prosecute their claims in the suit. Reliance was placed upon the decisions of the Privy Council in Rahimbihoj v. Turner and Saïyid Munzhar Hussain v. Bodha Bibi above referred to. The decisions of the Privy Council in Ramchand Mandyamal v. Goverdhandas and Abdul Rahman v. D. K. Cassim and Sons were distinguished on the ground that in neither case did the order dispose of any question affecting the substantive rights or liabilities of the parties in any way. An order granting leave to sue in *forma pauperis*¹¹ or refusing leave to appeal in *forma pauperis*¹² is a mere matter of procedure not finally deciding any rights of the parties and is not a "final order." An order extending the time for presenting an appeal under Section 5 of the Limitation Act¹³ or an order granting a review for re-hearing an appeal¹⁴ or an order rejecting an application made by the legal representatives of a deceased party to be brought on record¹⁵ or an order refusing to interfere in revision with an order of the lower Court allowing a co-degree-holder to join in executing the decree¹⁶ or an order directing the lower Court to proceed with the execution and determine the questions in dispute in execution,¹⁷ are all interlocutory orders and are not appealable under this Section.

See also the undermentioned cases.¹⁸

It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad¹⁹ that where an application to set aside an ex parte decree is rejected and on appeal the order is set aside, the appellate order is a "final order" within this Section inasmuch as such order finally determines the proceeding for setting aside the ex parte decree.

It has been seen in Note 6 to Section 2 (2) that a decision that a suit is not barred by res judicata or by limitation or in other like manner, is not a decision on any substantive rights of the parties. Such an order will, however, be a "final order" where the question as to bar by res judicata or limitation disposes of the rights of the parties in the suit.²⁰

5: "Order passed on appeal."—An order cannot be deemed to have been passed "on appeal" unless it is an order by a superior Court reversing, modifying or confirming the order of an inferior Court.¹ Two essentials must exist:—(a) the relationship of superior and inferior Court and (b) the power in the superior Court to review, affirm or modify, the decision of the inferior Court.² Again, the words "final order passed on appeal" are not equivalent to "final order passed in the exercise of final appellate jurisdiction" but imply orders disposing of an appeal at the hearing.³

1. A applies to the High Court to review its decision in an appeal before it. The High Court passes an order refusing the application for review. The order is not one "passed on appeal."⁴ The reason is that the High Court is not asked to deal with any order of an inferior Court.⁵ Nor does it dispose of the appeal at the hearing. Similarly an order of the High Court refusing stay of execution of his appellate decree⁶ or an order refusing an application for restoration of an appeal dismissed for default⁷ or an order rejecting an application for amendment of an appellate decree⁸ is not an order passed on appeal.

2. A applies to the High Court to pass a final decree according to the preliminary decree of the Privy Council. The order of the High Court on such application is not one "passed on appeal."⁹

3. A applies to the High Court for leave to appeal in forma pauperis and the same is dismissed. He subsequently files another application to be allowed to deposit the court-fee and that is also dismissed. The last order of dismissal is not an order "passed on appeal."¹⁰ The reason is that the appeal not having been admitted at all, the order in question could not be one passed "on appeal."

On the same principle as that mentioned in the last illustration, it has been held that an order rejecting an appeal for failure to furnish security for costs under O. 41 R. 10 is not an order passed "on appeal."¹¹ There is however a conflict of opinion whether an order refusing to admit an appeal after the period of limitation under Section 5 of the Limitation Act is an order passed "on appeal". According to the Bombay High Court and the Chief Court of Oudh such an order is not one passed on appeal.¹² The Calcutta¹³ and Patna¹⁴ High Courts and the Punjab Chief Court¹⁵ have held that the order is one passed on appeal within the meaning of clause (a) of Section 109.

There is also a conflict of decisions as to whether an order passed by the High Court in the exercise of its powers of revision under Section 115 of the Code or in the exercise of its powers of superintendence under Section 15 of the High Courts Act, 1861, (24 & 25 Vict., C. 104) is one passed on appeal. The High Courts of Allahabad and Patna and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Peshawar have held that it is not, while the Calcutta High Court has held that it is.¹⁷

5a. Whether appeal to Privy Council lies against appellate order from which no second appeal lies.—The provisions of the Code which preclude a further appeal from various appellate orders deal with internal appeals in British India and do not affect the maintainability of an appeal to the Privy Council against such orders.¹ Thus, an order passed by the High Court in appeal from one of the appealable orders specified in Section 104 sub-section 1 ante will be open to appeal to the Privy Council (notwithstanding the provisions of Section 104 sub-section 2) if the requirements of this Section and Section 110 as to valuation etc. are satisfied.²

The decision of the High Court on appeal from an order of the District Court which under Section 4, sub-section 2 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is 'final' subject to the right of appeal to the High Court under Section 75 of the Act, can be appealed against to the Privy Council. The reason is that when a right of appeal is given to one of the ordinary Courts of the country, the procedure, orders and decrees of that Court will be governed by the ordinary rules of the Civil Procedure Code.³

6. "Any other Court of final appellate jurisdiction."—Suppose a "final order" is passed by a District Court on appeal and that no second appeal lies from such order. Is the order to be treated as an order of a Court of final appellate jurisdiction within the meaning of clause (a)? In *Official Receiver, Madurai v. Kuppuswami Chettiar*⁴ it was held by the Madras High Court that an order passed by the District Court on appeal under Section 75 of the Provincial Insolvency Act was not the order of a Court of final appellate jurisdiction within the meaning of clause (a) of this Section. The decision proceeds on the ground that the expression "appellate jurisdiction" includes revisional jurisdiction and inasmuch as the order of the District Court was subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court, the District Court cannot be considered to be a Court of final appellate jurisdiction. In Saadatmand Khan v. Phul Kuar,⁵ however, a direct appeal from an appellate order of a District Court was entertained and disposed of by the Privy Council. But this decision was distinguished by the Madras High Court in the above case on the ground that the mere fact that an appeal is heard by the Privy Council does not amount to a ruling that such appeal is maintainable.

8. Limitation.—Under Article 179, Schedule I of the Limitation Act, 1908, the time prescribed for an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council is ninety days from the date of the decree or order appealed from.¹ There was a conflict of opinion as to whether Sections 5 and 12 of the Limitation Act could be applied to such applications.² Under the Limitation Act of 1908, those Sections have been made applicable to such applications³ and the decisions under the Act of 1877 to the contrary are no longer law.⁴

A single application cannot be filed for leave to appeal in two separate suits and appeals; where one such application is filed it is not open to the party to file another application out of time, though he can amend the former by confining the prayer for a certificate to one of the cases.⁵

9. Prerogative of the Crown. — See Section 112, infra.

10. Certificate of fitness — Clause (c). — This Section must be read with Order 45 Rule 3.

There are two kinds of certificates —

- (1) In a case coming under clauses (a) and (b) of Section 109, a certificate that, as regards amount or value and nature, the case fulfils the requirements of Section 110.
- (2) In a case coming under clause (c), that it is otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Majesty in Council.

It is not necessary that an order, in order to be appealable under this clause, should be a final one. Any decree or order, whether coming under clauses (a) and (b) or not, is appealable under this clause if it is certified to be a fit one for appeal.¹ Thus, even an interlocutory order may be appealable if there are questions fit for a certificate,² though Courts will hesitate to grant leave if it should involve needless expense at that stage.³ expenses at that stage.

This clause is intended to meet special cases such as those in which the point in dispute is not measurable in money though it may be of great public or private importance¹ and the grant of a certificate is in the discretion of the Court; but it must

1. Legislative changes. — Under orders in Council dated 10th April 1838 the only condition enforced with respect to Privy Council appeals was that the value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal to His Majesty shall amount to Rs. 10,000 at least. The additional conditions about the same value being necessary in the Court of first instance and the existence of a substantial question of law were first introduced by Section 5 of the Privy Council Appeals Act (VI of 1874).¹ This was later incorporated in Section 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1877, corresponding to the present Section.
 The words "final order" have been newly added after the word "decree." See Notes to Section 109.

2. Scope and construction of the Section. — It is the object of the Section not to encourage appeals to the Privy Council where the value of the subject-matter in dispute is small¹ or where, though the value is high, the dispute is only about a question of fact about which there has been concurrent findings in the Courts below.² The Section accordingly enacts that every appeal under Section 109, clauses (a) and (b) must be of the appealable value and, in cases of decrees of affirmance, must also involve a substantial question of law.³ No leave to appeal can be granted under this Section when the subject-matter in dispute is incapable of valuation in terms of money.⁴ The subject-matter in dispute must be of the appealable value both in the Court of first instance and on appeal to His Majesty in Council. The word "and" in the first paragraph of the Section cannot be construed as "or."⁵
 The terms of this Section must be strictly construed.⁶ No real mischief can arise from doing so, inasmuch as cases not coming within this Section, if worthy of being tried by a higher tribunal, can always be dealt with under Section 109, clause (c) and under Section 112.⁷

Though the first paragraph speaks of the "subject-matter of the suit" it must be deemed to include proceedings other than suits which may result in an appealable decree or order.⁸

As to consolidation of suits, see Order 45 Rule 4.

3. Valuation of the subject-matter in the Court of first instance.—In order that an appeal may lie to the Privy Council under the first paragraph of this Section, it is one of the essential conditions that the value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance should be Rs. 10,000 or upwards. Such value must be the value at the date of the suit and not a future increase or decrease thereof.¹ Thus, it will not include interest or mesne profits or costs after the date of the suit.² Nor will it include a subsequent accretion to the property in suit by alluvion, increase in value, etc.³

The value, again, must be the market value as ascertained by ordinary commercial standards, of the property or of the detriment to the applicant's interests if the right claimed is negatived.⁴

The value of the subject-matter of the suit will be Rs. 9,000. The reason is that, in a foreclosure suit, the value cannot exceed the value of the property to be foreclosed. But if the amount sued for is less than the value of the property, only the value of the subject-matter will be the amount sued for.⁸

(4) A sues B, the mortgagor and C, the puisne mortgagee, of certain items on a mortgage for Rs. 12,000. C contends that the items mortgaged to him, the market value of which is Rs. 2,000, are not liable to satisfy A's mortgage. The value of the subject-matter of the dispute between A and C is the whole mortgage amount of Rs. 12,000. The reason is that the entire liability under the mortgage can be enforced against any of the items mortgaged and that if C wants to redeem the mortgage he will have to pay the whole amount due under the mortgage and not merely the amount proportionate to the value of the items mortgaged to him.⁹ Where, however, C does not claim through B but does so adversely to him under a paramount title, he is not concerned with the mortgage at all and is not bound, like a subsequent mortgagee, to redeem it. The value of the dispute in such a case can be only the value of the property claimed by C under the paramount title.¹⁰

(5) A sues B for enforcement of an annuity of Rs. 125 per annum charged upon certain properties. The value of the subject-matter of the suit is the value of the annuity and not the value of the property upon which the annuity is charged. The value of an annuity of Rs. 125 per annum can be by no reasonable method of valuation be worth Rs. 10,000.¹¹ But a claim for a rent of Rs. 275 per month¹² or a rent of Rs. 1,500 per year¹³ will be worth more than Rs. 10,000. See also the undermentioned case.¹⁴

(6) A is a maintenance holder with a right to reside in a certain house on condition that if she is asked to vacate it she should be paid Rs. 400 a month in lieu of the right of residence. A is sued in ejectment. The subject-matter of the suit is the value of the house and not the difference between the value of the house and Rs. 400 a month which she will get.¹⁵

It follows from what has been said above that the applicant for leave to appeal is not bound by the fiscal standards under the Court-Fees and Suits Valuation Acts, by which he has valued the suit, but is entitled to show the actual or market value of the claim made.¹⁶ Where, however, he has once valued the claim at its market value,¹⁷ or where he, having a discretion to value his claim in alternative ways, chooses to value his claim in a particular way,¹⁸ he cannot thereafter be allowed to show that such value did not represent the real value. It has, however, been held in the under-mentioned case¹⁹ that the plaintiff is not absolutely precluded even in such a case from contending that his valuation in the plaint is wrong but that the Court will treat his admission as a strong piece of evidence against him. Where a plaintiff sued for accounts and valued the suit at Rs. 101 for the purpose of court-fees and filed the same in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge whose pecuniary jurisdiction extended only up to Rs. 5,000, it was held by the Bombay High Court²⁰ that the value of the subject-matter could not be shown to be anything beyond Rs. 5,000. The basis of the decision was that the plaintiff having deliberately instituted the suit in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge must be taken to have conceded the subject-matter to be a maximum of Rs. 5,000 and could not be allowed to turn round and say that it was over Rs. 10,000.²¹

A valuation of the property by the plaintiff which is admitted or is not objected to by the defendant, cannot be questioned by him (defendant) subsequently for the purpose of securing admission of an appeal to the Privy Council.²² In considering the value of the subject-matter of the suit, the value of the several reliefs should all be taken into consideration²³ but not ancillary reliefs.²⁴ Thus, in a suit for declaration and damages the value of the subject-matter is the value of the damages claimed as well as of the declaration asked for.²⁵ In a suit for specific performance of a contract to sell and for possession, the relief of possession is only ancillary to the specific performance and its value cannot therefore be taken into consideration.²⁶

4. Date of valuation.—The valuation of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance is the value at the date of suit.¹ As to the valuation of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal, see Note 8, infra.

5. Mesne profits, interest and costs after date of suit.—Till recently, there was divergence of opinion among the High Courts in India on the following questions:—

(1) Whether in a suit for money the "value of the subject-matter in the Court of first instance" included interest from the date of suit to the date of the

(37) AIR 1937 Cal 292 (296). (A mere mistake in stating the value in the plaint where the other side has not been precluded by having to resort to a different forum does not amount to estoppel in law so as to prevent the plaintiff from showing that the real value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was Rs. 10,000 or upwards.)

(2) whether in a suit for land or other immovable property and mesne profits, the "value of the subject-matter in the Court of first instance" included future mesne profits after the date of suit; and if so up to what period?"

The conflict has now been set at rest by the decision of the Privy Council in *Alangama v. Alalaksimamma*² in which it has been held that neither interest nor mesne profits after the date of suit could be included for the purpose of ascertaining the value of the subject-matter of the suit under Section 110. Their Lordships entirely approved of the reasoning and decision of the Madras High Court in Subramania Aiyar v. Sellammal.³ See also the undermentioned cases.⁴

The costs of the suit are in no sense the subject-matter of the suit and ought not to be added to the subject-matter in order to bring the valuation up to the appeal-able amount.⁵

"In the first place, the sum of money actually at stake may not represent the true value. The proceeding may in many cases, such as a suit for an instalment of rent or under a contract, raise the entire question of the contract relations between the parties and that the question may, settled one way or the other, affect a much greater value, and its determination may govern rights and liabilities of a value beyond the limit."

7. Value as laid in the plaint. — See Note 3 above.

8. Valuation of subject-matter in dispute on appeal. — Another essential condition for the applicability of the first paragraph of the Section is that the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council must also be Rs. 10,000 or upwards. Such amount or value is the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute at the date of the decree of the High Court under appeal. It follows that interest or mesne profits subsequent to that decree cannot be added for the purpose of reaching the specified amount of Rs. 10,000.²

The meaning of the words "in dispute" is illustrated by the following example :

Illustration

A sues B on breach of contract for recovery of Rs. 8,000 paid as advance, and of Rs. 7,000 as damages. The Court of first instance passes a decree in A's favour for the recovery of Rs. 5,000 paid as advance and of Rs. 2,000 as damages. On appeal to the High Court, the decree for Rs. 5,000 is upheld but the claim for damages is dismissed. Is A entitled to apply for a certificate for leave to appeal to the Privy Council? No; the decree for Rs. 5,000 having been upheld it can no longer be dispute in A's appeal. The subject-matter of the dispute can therefore be only the disallowed claim for damages, namely, for Rs. 7,000, which is less than the appealable value.³

9. Several appeals from a single decree. — Where, in a suit to set aside different alienations by a Hindu widow, the plaintiff-reversioner obtained a decree in his favour in the first Court and on separate appeals being filed by the alienees, the High Court drew up one decree under Rule 93 of the Madras Civil Rules of Practice (old R. 105) and the plaintiff applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, it was held that the application must be considered as if a separate decree had been passed in each appeal, and that, accordingly, leave could be granted only in those

(In this appeal from Ontario, the Privy Council interpreted the words "where the matter in controversy in any case exceeds the sum or value of 4000 dollars" which occurred in S. 1 of the Privy Council Appeals Act of Ontario and held that the true test was what was at stake on the appeal.)

appeals in which the subject-matter was over Rs. 10,000 in value.

10. Effect of abandonment of portion of claim after grant of certificate.—Where a would-be appellant, bona fide intending to appeal in respect of the whole amount decreed against him, obtains leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, the appeal will not be rendered incompetent by the mere fact that at the hearing of the appeal he withdraws a part of his appeal thereby reducing the amount in dispute to one below the appealable value.¹

11. "Or the decree or final order must involve, directly or indirectly, some claim or question to or respecting property of the like amount or value."—Where the value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance or the value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to the Privy Council is less than Rs. 10,000, no certificate can be granted, as has been seen already under the first paragraph of the Section. But a certificate can be granted even in such a case under the second paragraph of the Section if the decree or final order involves some claim or question to or respecting property of the amount or value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards.¹

The words "some claim or question to or respecting property" must be interpreted to mean "some claim or question to, or respecting, property additional to, or other than the actual subject-matter in dispute in the appeal." The leading case on the point is Subramania Aiyar v. Sellamman, A. I. R. 1916 Madras 985.

The distinction in the applicability of the first and second paragraphs of the Section has been thus expressed by Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., in the said case: "We have to take both the clauses together so as to give a meaning to both. In my judgment the first clause applies to cases where the decree awards a particular sum, or property of a particular value, or refuses that relief, i. e., to cases where the object-matter in dispute is of a particular value. In fact the words "objects in dispute," are used in the provisions relating to appeals from Guernsey. If the operation of the decision is confined to the particular object-matter, clause 2 does not apply, and unless the case satisfies the conditions of clause 1, there is no right of appeal. If the decision, beyond awarding relief in respect of the particular object-matter of the suit affects rights in other properties clause 2 would apply."

The decision in *Subramania Aiyar v. Sellammal*³ has been recently approved by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mangamma v. Mahalakshimamma.⁴ The contrary view which was apparently taken by Maclean, C. J., in Dalglish v. Danno-dar,⁵ was an obiter dictum and, in view of the Madras decision above referred to as approved by the Privy Council, is no longer law.

A claim or question to or respecting other property cannot be said to be involved under this paragraph unless the decree or order has the effect of stopping, either by the rule of res judicata or otherwise, a party from claiming rights in, or agitating the same question in respect of such other property.⁶ It follows that the claim or question must be one arising between the parties to the suit in which the appeal is taken.⁷ It also follows that a claim or question which is not essential or relevant for the decision⁸ or is too remote⁹ or is in germinis and may never materialise¹⁰ cannot be said to be involved directly or indirectly in the decree or order.

respect of holding X but also in respect of holdings Y and Z. The decree, therefore, involves a claim

(2) A sues B for the recovery of a property valued at less than Rs. 10,000 basing his claim under a deed of gift. Other claimants who are donees of other properties under the same deed of gift are also made parties to the suit and the total value of the subject-matter of the deed far exceeds Rs. 10,000. A's suit is dismissed on the ground that the deed of gift is void. Here the decree involves a claim or question to or respecting property other than the property actually claimed in the suit.¹³ But, in the undermentioned case,¹⁴ it was held by the Calcutta High Court that the word "property" in the second paragraph of this Section must be taken to be the property of the applicant for leave and that it is the extent to which the decree has operated to the prejudice of the applicant that determines the value of the property for the purposes of the Section. Hence, it was held in that case that in a suit by some of the heirs of a certain person for maintenance allowances, the plaintiffs were entitled to rely only upon the value of their own share and not upon the value of the entire monthly allowances payable to all the heirs when the other heirs, though made parties, had not made any claim. In such circumstances, it was held that it could not be said that the decision in the suit would involve directly or indirectly the interests of the others who had made no claim.

(3) A is the owner of a gany consisting of several grounds occupied by several tenants. A sues B, one of such tenants, for ejectment and for enhancement of rent. The other tenants of the other grounds are not parties to this suit. Here, the decision in the suit, though it may seriously prejudice A in similar suit, which he may have to file against the other tenants of the other sites, cannot be said to involve a question in respect of all the sites.¹⁵

(4) A sues for partition and possession of his share in family property. Does the decision in the suit involve a claim or question to or respecting the other share? No, according to the Bombay and Madras High Courts.¹⁶ Yes, according to the High Courts of Calcutta¹⁷ and Allahabad,¹⁷ the reason being that the share of the plaintiff could not be ascertained without determining the value of all the other shares in the estate. The Patna High Court has held that the question depends upon the particular circumstances of each case; where the only question for determination is whether the plaintiff is entitled to a specific share leaving the rest of the property undivided in the hands of the defendants, the decree may not involve any question relating to the other shares; but where the suit is one for general partition in which some of the defendants are themselves claimants of shares, and the decree in appeal deprives them equally with the plaintiff of the benefit of the first Court's decree, the decree in appeal will be considered to involve a claim or question to, or respecting the other shares also.¹⁸ The Bombay High Court also has held that where the decree of the High Court pre-judicially affects the interests of both the plaintiff and one of the defendants in the case, the total value of the shares of the plaintiff and such defendant can be taken into consideration in determining the value of the property involved in the decree.¹⁹

Another important point to remember in applying this paragraph is that it is not sufficient that the decree affects property whose value is Rs. 10,000 or upwards. It is necessary that it should involve rights and claims to property which rights and claims are themselves worth Rs. 10,000 or upwards.²⁰ In other words, where some subsidiary interest such as an easement of small value attached to property of great

(1) A files a suit on a prior mortgage against B, the mortgagor, and C, the puisne mortgagee of a 12 annas share in the property mortgaged to A. A decree is passed for sale, in the first instance of the 12 annas share are insufficient to satisfy the decree amount. The 12 annas share is sold and the proceeds being found insufficient, the 1 annas share is also sold. C applies thereafter to set aside the sale on the ground of irregularity in conducting and publishing the sale, but the petition is dismissed by the High Court. C applies for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. Here there is, no doubt, a dispute as to the whole property but so far as C is concerned its value to him cannot be anything more than the market value of his 1 annas share, and if that is under Rs. 10,000, no leave can be granted.²²

(2) A claims a right of way over a piece of land valued at Rs. 1,500, and forming part of a survey number valued at Rs. 10,000, A having a right to fence the way from the remaining land. Here the claim of A cannot be of more value to A than the value of the piece of land over which he claims the right of way, i. e., Rs. 1,500. No leave can therefore be granted.²³

(3) A sues B for ejectment from a site valued at Rs. 300 on the ground that B is a tenant-at-will. B contends that he is a permanent tenant of the land and that he has put up buildings thereon valued at Rs. 23,000. A is willing that B should remove the buildings. In such a case the claim of A cannot (in view of his laying no claim to the buildings) be worth to him more than the value of the site viz., Rs. 300. No leave can therefore be granted.²⁴

The Allahabad High Court has, however, in a recent decision²⁵ dissented from the view that the right claimed must itself be worth Rs. 10,000 or upwards. In that case it was held that the second paragraph of this Section gave a right of appeal to the Privy Council from a mortgage decree for the sale of property worth more than Rs. 10,000 although the decree itself was for a sum less than Rs. 10,000.

Where an applicant for leave files an affidavit that the decree or order involves a claim respecting property exceeding Rs. 10,000 in value and there is no counter affidavit by the respondents, the High Court may assume that the petitioner's affidavit is correct.²⁶

12. Appeal from decree of affirmance must involve a substantial question of law. — Where the decree or final order appealed from is one of affirmance, there must exist a substantial question of law in addition to the requirements as to value mentioned in the first and second paragraphs of the Section.¹

Suppose the plaintiff sues the defendant for Rs. 20,000 on a promissory note. The lower Court passes a decree in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 8,000 disallowing his claim for the balance, viz. Rs. 12,000. The High Court on appeal varies the decree by enhancing the amount decreed to Rs. 9,000. The plaintiff wants to appeal to the Privy Council on the ground that he is entitled to the balance of the amount also, viz., Rs. 11,000. Can it be said that inasmuch as the decree of the High Court concurs with that of the lower Court in disallowing the plaintiff's claim for this sum, that the decree of the High Court is one of affirmance of the lower Court's decree? It has been held by the Privy Council that in such cases the High Court's decree cannot be said to be one of affirmance of the lower Court's decree and this view has been followed in the undermentioned decisions.⁸

The contrary view taken by the Calcutta High Court in *Raja Sree Nath Roy v. Secretary of State*⁹ must be treated as overruled by the above decision of the Privy Council.¹⁰

It will be seen that such cases are clearly distinguishable from the cases above referred to in which the lower Court's decree covers different matters and the High Court affirms such decree in regard to some of them and varies or reverses the decree in regard to others.¹¹

14. Cross-appeals.—A obtains a decree against B for a portion of the amount claimed. A and B both prefer separate appeals against the decree in respect of the portion which is against them. A's appeal is dismissed but B's appeal is allowed in part. Can A obtain leave to appeal to the Privy Council on the ground that the decree has been modified in the cross-appeal of B? The Patna High Court has held that the appeal and the cross-appeal must be considered together and both the decrees must be regarded as one for the purpose of determining the question of affirmance.¹² The Calcutta High Court also seems to be of the same view.¹³ The Allahabad and Lahore High Courts have held a contrary view, namely, that it is only the decree in A's appeal that must be considered.¹⁴ The Madras High Court has held that where the cross-appeal or the memorandum of cross-objections relates to a matter distinct from the subject-matter of the appeal, the Allahabad view is to be followed¹⁵ but that, where it is not possible to say whether the decree in the appeal and the memorandum of objections really consists of separate decrees in respect of separate subject-matter, they should be considered together for the purpose of determining whether the decree is one of affirmance.¹⁶

19. Review.— See Order 45 Rule 3.

20. Appeal.— See Order 45 Rule 3.

1-11. [S. 597.] Notwithstanding anything contained in section 109, no appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council —

- (a) from the decree or order of one Judge of a High Court "constituted by His Majesty by Letters Patent, or of one Judge of a Division Court, or of two or more Judges of such High Court, or of a Division Court constituted by two or more Judges of such High Court, where such Judges are equally divided in opinion and do not amount in number to a majority of the whole of the Judges of the High Court at the time being; or
- (b) from any decree from which under section 102 no second appeal lies.

a. Substituted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, for "established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1921, or the Government of India Act, 1915."

(Where the law as to consecutive res judicata has been applied (and correctly applied) to a set of facts currently found of two Courts in India, there is no such "substantial question of law" involved in the case.)

3. Scope and object of the Section.—This Section definitely prohibits an appeal to the Privy Council from a decree made by a single Judge of a High Court and to this extent overrides Clause 39 of the Letters Patent by virtue of Clause 44 thereof. See note 2 to Section 109. The object is to allow an appeal to the Privy Council only after all the remedies are exhausted in the Indian Courts.²

The prohibition, however, only applies to the decree or order of a Judge or Judges of a Chartered High Court and not to other High Courts.³

4. "Decree or order," meaning of.—See Notes 3, 4 and 10 to Section 109.

111A. Where a certificate has been given under section 205 (1) Appeals to Federal Court. of the Government of India Act, 1935, the three last preceding sections shall apply in relation to appeals to the Federal Court as they apply in relation to appeals to His Majesty in Council, and accordingly references to His Majesty shall be construed as references to the Federal Court :

Provided that —

(a) so much of the said sections as delimits the cases in which an appeal will be construed as delimiting the cases in which an appeal will be without the leave of the Federal Court otherwise than on the ground that a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the said Act, or any Order in Council made thereunder, has been wrongly decided ;

(b) in determining under clause (c) of section 109 whether the case is a fit one for appeal, and, under section 110, whether the appeal involves a substantial question of law, any question of law as to the interpretation of the

112. [S. 616.] (1) Nothing contained in this Code shall be deemed—

- (a) to bar the full and unqualified exercise² of His Majesty's pleasure in receiving or rejecting appeals to His Majesty in Council, or otherwise howsoever, or
- (b) to interfere with any rules³ made by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and for the time being in force, for the presentation of appeals to His Majesty in Council, or their conduct⁴ before the said Judicial Committee.

(2) Nothing herein contained applies to any matter of criminal or admiralty or vice-admiralty jurisdiction, or to appeals from orders and decrees of Prize Courts.

1. Legislative changes. — The words "herein contained" have been substituted for the words "in this chapter" occurring in the old Section.

2. Scope and object of the Section. — This Section does not confer a right upon the subject to prefer an appeal to His Majesty in Council. It merely declares that nothing in the Code will affect the exercise of the appellate jurisdiction which the Sovereign in Council undoubtedly possesses by virtue of the Royal Prerogative.¹ His Majesty in Council can therefore receive or reject an appeal notwithstanding anything

3. Prerogative of the Crown. — Clause (a). — See Note 2 above.

4. Grounds for the exercise of the prerogative. — Special leave under this Section will not be granted as a matter of course.¹ It will be refused where the question involved is merely one of practice or of form or of costs² or where the refusal of the High Court to grant leave is not shown to be wrong.³ Again, the Judicial Committee will not entertain an application for leave to appeal against an act of State.⁴ But leave will be granted where the question involved is an important or substantial question of law of general interest, even though the value of the subject-matter of the appeal is below Rs. 10,000 or the application to the High Court is time-barred.⁵

5. Practice of the Privy Council.—The provisions of the Code do not apply to the procedure of the Privy Council in hearing appeals from India but the Privy Council may follow the rules contained in such provisions where it considers them to be based on sound principles.¹ See also Notes 6 to 10 and 12 below and the under-mentioned cases.²

6. Findings of fact.—It is a long established rule of practice of the Board that it will not as a general rule disturb concurrent findings of fact by two Courts in India,¹ though such findings do not always or necessarily prevent their Lordships from is within the discretion of their Lordships of the Privy Council to allow the appeal to be heard.⁴

13. Proceedings for contempt of Court—Whether appeal to Privy Council lies.—In Kapildas Malaviya v. Chief Justice and Judges of the High Court, Allahabad certain persons were fined by the High Court for contempt of the High Court in having published an article in a newspaper which contained an "unwarranted and defamatory aspersions on the character and ability of a number of Judges of the High Court." On an application by such persons for leave to appeal to the Privy Council it was held by the Allahabad High Court that no leave could be granted. The decision was based on two grounds : 1. The proceedings were of a criminal nature and as such not within the provisions of the Code relating to appeals to the Privy Council. 2. The matter was of an exclusive jurisdiction and the order of the High Court was 'final.'

But in S. N. Banerjee v. Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co. Ltd.,² it was held by the Privy Council that a committal for a finding of contempt for breach of an injunction is not criminal in its nature and is properly dealt with under the Civil Procedure Code and hence, there could be an appeal to the Privy Council in such cases under the Civil Procedure Code.

PART VIII.

REFERENCE, REVIEW AND REVISION

113. [S. 617.] Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, any Court may state a case and refer the same for the opinion of the High Court, and the High Court may make such order thereon as it thinks fit. [1877, S. 617; 1861, S. 28; See Order 46.]

Synopsis

1. "Court," meaning of.
2. "Subject to such conditions . . . prescribed."

1. "Court," meaning of. — The Deputy Commissioner of Oudh¹ or a Collector hearing an application under the Bombay Mamladars' Courts Act² is not a "Court" within the meaning of this Section and cannot state a case for the opinion of the High Court. Applications which had been submitted to the Alahabad Bench of Benares in civil cases from the Benares State Court cannot be referred under this Section to the Alahabad High Court for its opinion.³

2. "Subject to such conditions . . . prescribed." — For such conditions and limitations, see Order 46.

This part of the Code does not apply to suits and proceedings under the Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926), Section 264, Second Schedule.

114. [S. 623.] Subject as aforesaid, any person considering himself aggrieved —

(a) by a decree or order from which an appeal is allowed by this Code, but from which no appeal has been preferred,

(b) by a decree or order from which no appeal is allowed by this Code, or

(c) by a decision on a reference from a Court of Small Causes, may apply for a review of judgment to the

1. History of the Section. — The Code of 1859 did not contain any provision for the exercise of revisional powers by the High Court. When the Charter Act of 1861 was passed establishing the High Courts in the several Presidencies (Bengal, Bombay and Madras), a power of superintendence was conferred on them over subordinate Courts subject to their appellate jurisdiction by Section 15 of that Act. But before the actual constitution of the High Courts, the Sudder Courts were empowered by Section 35 of Act XXIII of 1861 to call for the records of any case decided in appeal by the Subordinate Court and in which no further appeal lay when the subordinate Court appeared to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it. That Section is the foundation of the present Section.¹
- The North-West Provinces Rent Act. See Note 6.
- The Bombay High Court's powers of revision under Regulation II of 1827. See Note 2.
- Questions of limitation. See Note 13.
- Issuing writs of certiorari. See Note 2.
- Powers of the High Courts in the matter of landlords' Courts Act. See Notes 6, 8 and 10.
- Powers of revision under the Bombay Municipalities Act. See Note 5.
- Orders granting or refusing addition of parties.
- be entertained in revision. See Note 2.
- Objections to jurisdiction depending on disputed facts and not raised in trial Court will not be entertained in revision. See Note 2.
- Notes 8 and 16.
- No interference on merely technical grounds. See Notes 3 and 16.

The Section, as it originally stood, contained only the first two clauses. The third clause was added in 1879.

No material changes have been made in the present Section.

2. Scope and object of the Section.—This Section provides for the exercise of revisional powers of the High Courts. But it is necessary that the following conditions are satisfied before such powers can be exercised —

- (1) There must have been a case decided by the subordinate Court. See Note 4.
- (2) The Court deciding the case must be one subordinate to the High Court. See Note 6.
- (3) The decision must be one in which no appeal lies. See Note 7.
- (4) The subordinate Court must have in the decision of the case, exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law (see Note 9) or failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it (see Note 11) or must have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. See Note 12.

Where the above conditions are not satisfied the High Court cannot interfere on the ground of expediency.¹ The powers under this Section are intended to be exercised with a view to subserve and not to defeat the ends of justice.² Where, therefore, substantial justice has been rendered by the order of the lower Court, the High Court will not interfere in revision notwithstanding the fact that the reasons for the order are not correct.³

The High Court cannot, in the exercise of its revisional powers under this Section, attack findings of fact of the subordinate Court or substitute its own appreciation of evidence for that of the primary Court.⁴ These are functions of a Court is not bound to allow even a point of jurisdiction to be raised for the first time in revision⁸ although it can allow such point to be raised.⁹

The Section is not exhaustive and the jurisdiction which the High Courts have inherited from the Supreme Courts in the matter of issuing writs of certiorari cannot be said to have been taken away by this Section.¹⁰ High Courts have, also, in addition to the power given under this Section, powers of superintendence over subordinate Courts under Section 224 of the Government of India Act of 1935. See Notes to Section 224 of the Government of India Act of 1935 in the Appendices.¹¹

The Bombay High Court has also been given under Section 5 of Regulation II of 1827 power, in its extraordinary jurisdiction, "to call for the proceedings of any subordinate Court and to pass such orders thereon as the case may require."¹²

3. "May call for the record."—The exercise of the revisional powers of the High Court is entirely discretionary. The High Court will not take a technical view and necessarily interfere in every case where an order has been made irregularly or even improperly¹ unless grave injustice or hardship would result from a failure to do so.² As to whether the High Court would exercise its discretion in favour of interference where another remedy is open to the party, see Note 8, infra. On the other hand, where the conditions of the Section are satisfied and interference in any particular case is found necessary, the High Court may of its own motion call for the record and pass the necessary orders. It is not necessary that an application by a party should be filed.³ It is the practice of the Bombay High Court, however, not to exercise its powers of interference, under Regulation II of 1827, unless a party applies.⁴ Where a party applies for a revision, the mere fact that a non-party has also joined in the application is no bar to the High Court entertaining and disposing of the application.⁵ It has also been held that a person who is not aggrieved by an order cannot apply for revision against the order.⁶

4. "Any case which has been decided."—The word 'case' has nowhere been defined.¹ It has, however, been held to have a wider meaning than the words 'suit' or 'appeal'.² In Chatterpal Singh v. Rayaram, I. L. R. 7 Allahabad 661, Mr. Justice Mahmood observed as follows :

"The word 'case,' as used in Section 622 of the Code, is nowhere defined ; but adopting the general rule of construing statutes, I hold that the word should be understood in its broadest and most ordinary sense, unless there were specific reasons for narrowing its meaning."

And in Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar, A. I. R. 1917 Privy Council 71, where the question was whether an ex parte proceeding under the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, constituted a 'case' within the meaning of this Section, their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows :

"It cannot, in their Lordships' view be contended to a litigation in which there is a plaintiff who seeks to obtain particular relief in damages or otherwise against a defendant who is before the Court. It must, they think, include an ex parte application such as that made in this case praying that persons in the position of trustees or officials should perform their trust or discharge their official duties."

So also where a scheme had been framed for the management of a public temple and under such scheme the Devasthan Committee of the taluka was given power to audit the accounts of the managing committee of the temple and where on the report of the Devasthan Committee pointing out irregularities in the management the District Judge passed orders interfering in the management and threatening action in case of disobedience, it was held by the Bombay High Court that the proceeding was a 'case' within the meaning of this Section.³

So also it has been held that a 'case' includes proceedings under the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, and the Succession Certificate Act.⁴ Similarly, the proceedings of a District Judge under the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (14 of 1920) are open to revision by the High Court under this Section.⁵ Where the whole case was over and the only thing that remained to be done was the preparation of the decree, it was held to be a 'case decided' within this Section.⁶ It has been held that where the decision of the Court is in favour of the party concerned an application by him against a finding is not competent.⁷ As to whether an interlocutory order is a 'case decided,' see Note 5 below.

5. Interlocutory orders.—There is a conflict of views among the various High Courts as to whether an interlocutory application is a 'case' and an interlocutory order 'a case decided,' within the meaning of this Section. It has been held by a Full Bench of the High Court of Allahabad⁸ that it is not. Its view is based on the ground that though the word 'case' is more comprehensive than the word 'suit' no instance can be quoted of its use in the Code where it would not at least include a 'suit' and that where the 'case' in which the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court is invoked happens to be also a 'suit,' then the suit itself is the case which requires to be decided before the record is called for. It was therefore held that an interlocutory order in a suit which did not decide the suit itself is not a 'case decided' and cannot be interfered with under S. 115. Order 14 Rule 2 was relied upon as showing that the word

The Peshawar Judicial Commissioner's Court has also held that the expression 'case decided' will not include an interlocutory order. All these Courts have, however, held that proceedings before a suit is commenced, or after a suit has ended and proceedings for which the Legislature has provided an independent remedy or a different procedure, are not interlocutory proceedings and will therefore be open to interference in revision. Court is of a contrary opinion.¹⁸ As to an application under O. 1 R. 10 the Allahabad High Court holds that it is an interlocutory order and not a case.¹⁴ While the Oudh Chief Court holds that it is a separate and independent proceeding.¹⁵ The Lahore High Court¹⁶ has held that where the plaintiff dies during the pendency of a suit and two parties, each claiming to be his legal representative, apply to be brought on the record, and the Court decides in favour of one party, the proceedings, so far as the other party is concerned, do not raise in the suit itself but are rather collateral proceedings and final qua that party, and hence the order amounts to a case decided.¹⁷

A suit was instituted against A, B, C and D on the basis of a promissory note executed by them. The Court ordered that the suit could not proceed against A as the promissory note was signed by him at a place which was beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. It was held by the Lahore High Court that a revision would be competent as the proceedings terminated so far as A was concerned and therefore there was a case decided.¹⁷

The proceeding started by the filing of an application under Section 7 (1) (a) of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act is a fresh proceeding and therefore a 'case'.¹⁸

An order allowing an amendment of the plaint, being of an interlocutory nature would not be open to revision, according to the Allahabad view.¹⁹ But, it was held in certain earlier decisions of the Allahabad High Court that an order refusing to allow an amendment of the plaint was a 'case decided' and may be revised under this Section.²⁰ But this view has been overruled by a later Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court which has held that there is no difference in this respect between an order allowing an amendment of the plaint and one refusing such amendment.²¹

An order refusing to file an award and directing the suit to proceed is interlocutory in its nature and as such not open to revision.²²

High Court is not powerless to interfere under Section 115, with interlocutory orders. The Calcutta, Madras and Patna High Courts have also interfered with such orders in the exercise of their powers of superintendence under Section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 (corresponding to Section 15 of the Charter Act, 1861).²⁹ It must, however, be noted in this connexion that under sub-section 2 to Section 224 of the Government of India Act of 1935 the High Court has no power of revision in respect of the judicial proceedings in lower Courts except in so far as such power may be otherwise conferred. See Notes to Section 224 of the Government of India Act of 1935 given as an Appendix to this work. The High Court of Bombay has also acted under Regulation II of 1827, Section 5 and interfered with such orders.³⁰

It is submitted with respect that the Allahabad and Lahore view stated above is not correct. A judgment, under O. 20 R. 4, must contain a concise statement of the 'case' and under Section 2 clause 9, a 'judgment' means the statement given by the Judge of the grounds of a decree or order. A judgment in support of an order which will, of course, include an interlocutory order must, therefore, contain a concise statement of the 'case' which can only mean the matter in dispute in the particular proceeding. This view is also supported by Section 113 of the Code which enacts that any Court may state a 'case' and refer the same for the opinion of the High Court. A reference to the Report of Select Committee in 1879 for amending Section 622 of the Code of 1877 by introducing words therein corresponding to clause (c) of this Section makes the matter still more clear. It was there stated that the object of the amendment was to extend Section 115 (now Section 115) to cases in which the High Court of Bombay was then acting in the exercise of its powers under Regulation II of 1827, Section 5. This power extended under the said regulation, to call for the proceedings of any Subordinate Court and to pass such order thereon as the case may require.

As has been seen already in Note 3 ante, the exercise of revisional powers, even in cases where Section 115 is held to apply, is a matter of discretion, and in the case of interlocutory orders, the High Court will not interfere except where the evidence is inadmissible does not amount to a "case" decided.

As to whether the High Court will interfere with an interlocutory order in the exercise of its discretion under this Section where another remedy is open to the party either under Section 105 or otherwise, see Note 8 infra.

An interlocutory order which is appealable as an order under Section 104 or O. 43 R. 1, is not revisable under Section 115 which applies only to cases in which no appeal lies to the High Court.³⁸

(3) Where non-interference will lead to multiplicity of proceedings and unnecessary expense and delay.¹³

(4) Where the other remedy is inconvenient or not expeditious and would involve so much expense as to practically amount to no remedy at all.¹⁴

(5) Where grave injustice or a defeat of the provisions of law is likely to result from non-interference.¹⁵

The powers of the High Court under Section 115 should, however, be liberally utilised where the applicant has no other remedy,¹⁶ though even in such cases the High Court may, in its discretion, refuse to interfere.¹⁷

9. Jurisdiction.—The word 'jurisdiction' has been used in this Section in its broad legal sense as meaning the power of administering justice according to the means which the law provided and subject to the limitations imposed by that law upon the judicial authority; such limitations may be territorial or pecuniary or they may relate to the nature of the litigation or the domicile or nationality of the parties or the class or rank to which the tribunal belongs.¹ Section 115 contemplates three cases in which the revisional powers of the High Court may be exercised—

(1) the assumption by the lower Court of a jurisdiction which it does not possess, (2) its failure to exercise a jurisdiction which it does possess, and (3) where there is exercise of jurisdiction which the Court possesses but the exercise has been in a manner which is illegal or materially irregular.²

reason is that the Court could only adjudicate upon the application if it was prosecuted by a person fulfilling the character required by R. 89, and the decision upon the point whether the applicant has the necessary legal character is clearly a question involving jurisdiction inasmuch as it is the very basis and foundation of the power to adjudicate upon the merits of the application.⁵ The High Court of Allahabad has, however, held in the undermentioned case⁶ that the refusal of an application under O. 21 R. 89, on the ground that the applicant had no locus standi to apply is only an error in the exercise of jurisdiction and not a failure to exercise jurisdiction.

which such jurisdiction is to be exercised. The arriving at a conclusion or decision is only a mental operation and the Court cannot be said to be "acting" in so coming to a conclusion or decision on a question of law or fact. The decision in Amir Hassan Khan's case is perfectly intelligible upon this principle. There is no necessity, nor is there anything in the language of the Section, to limit the meaning of the words in clause (c) to perverse decisions only though where the Court is perverse, i. e., where it willfully or consciously disregards the provisions of law, it is certainly acting illegally in exercise of its jurisdiction."

Where there is an illegality in the exercise of jurisdiction the order of the Court is void and of no effect and nothing more need be shown for maintaining a revision. Where, however, there is an irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction such irregularity must be shown to be a material one, i. e., one which would have affected the decision of the case upon the merits.¹⁰ Whether an act is illegal or merely irregular seems to depend upon the importance of the provision of law disregarded.¹¹ Thus, where the law expressly prohibits a thing to be done, a disregard of such a provision has been held to amount to an illegality.¹² The distinction, however, between what is illegal and what is materially irregular, has not been very clearly drawn by the decisions¹³ and very often the same thing is sometimes treated as an illegality and sometimes as a material irregularity. Thus, it was held in the undermentioned case¹⁴ that a Court acts illegally in the exercise of its jurisdiction if it arrives at a conclusion without any evidence to support it. The same thing has been treated as a material irregularity in other cases.¹⁵

3 A plea that the Court refused to exercise jurisdiction cannot be raised along with 3 the plea that the Court acted with material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction.⁶²
An objection to an application for revision that the lower Court had jurisdiction to hear and decide the matter and that it did not exercise its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity is not a preliminary objection inasmuch as such objection cannot be decided without going into the merits of the application for revision.⁶³

But a conclusion or decision arrived at in the proper exercise of jurisdiction, which is erroneous in law or fact is, as has been observed in Note 12 above, not a ground for revision.² In where the interference is likely to work not in the interest of justice but rather against it, the High Court will not interfere.⁶ Where, however, a particular order creates an anomalous position or leaves the matter in a muddle,⁸ the High Court will set it aside in revision. Thus, while a Small Cause Judge returned a plaint which had been returned by the Munsif to be presented before the former and the Munsif adhered to his previous order, the High Court is entitled to make such an order as would enable the plaintiff to have his action tried.⁹ But a party who, by his conduct creates a particular position, cannot, in revision, seek to set it aside.¹⁰

16a. Nature of order made in revision against a decree.—An order passed in revision from a decree is a decree as much as an appellate decree.¹ But, an order dismissing a petition for revision does not substitute a decree of the revisional Court for that of the Court below. When a revising Court refuses to exercise its power of revision, it does not confirm any decree but merely declines to interfere, leaving the decree of the Court below intact as the decree of that Court.²

17. Laches in making the application.—Applications in revision are not governed by any law of limitation.³ Revision is a purely discretionary remedy. It is a privilege and not a right and corresponds to the remedies in England known as certiorari and mandamus. The invariable rule in all these cases is that the party aggrieved must come to the Court at the earliest possible moment. When, therefore, there has been a great and unexplained delay or laches in making the application, the Court will refuse to interfere.² Where, however, the petitioner is not to be blamed for the delay³ or where there are exceptional circumstances⁴ the High Court will not refuse to exercise its powers under the Section. Thus, when the petitioner failed in his attempt to set aside an ex parte decree and then filed a suit to vacate the same for want of jurisdiction but the Court held that the relief could not be granted, and then a revision was preferred to the High Court, the circumstances were held sufficient to explain the delay in applying for revision.⁵ The practice of the High Court of Patna is to entertain applications in revision only if they are filed within three months of the date of the order sought to be revised.⁶

21. Orders under Sections 152 and 153.—The High Courts of Allahabad, Bombay⁷ and Calcutta⁸ and the Chief Court of the Punjab⁹ have held that an order passed under Section 206 of the old Code constitutes an adjudication separate from that concluded by the decree and amounts to a decision of a 'case' capable of being revised. The same view has been taken under the present Code also.⁵ Accordingly, it has been held that if a Court refuses to amend a decree in conformity with the judgment it amounts to a refusal to exercise jurisdiction.⁶ In an old Allahabad case⁷ when the decree was amended from "I dismiss the appeal" to "I accept the appeal" it was considered to be a grave irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction. Similarly, a Court has no power to vary or amend a decree when it is in conformity with the judgment and, if done, it will be open to revision.⁸

The High Court of Madras⁹ has, on the other hand, held that no revision lies way of a suit is available to the aggrieved party under clause (2) of Section 73.¹ This, however, does not mean that the aggrieved party should be confined to that remedy "if the circumstances of the case warrant an interference." Accordingly when Courts have acted in defiance of the terms of Section 73 and thereby assumed a jurisdiction which they did not possess or declined jurisdiction in a proper case, the High Court will interfere to set matters right.²

See Notes to Section 73 also.

23. Orders in claim cases.

As has been seen in Note 8 ante, no application will ordinarily be entertained to revise an order passed under O. 21 Rr. 60, 61 or 62 inasmuch as the party against whom the order is made has a special remedy by way of a suit. But this does not bar the High Court's power of interference in exceptional cases.¹ Thus, if the lower Court fails to determine the only real question that has to be decided, namely, that of possession² and disposes of the petition on a determination of the question of title³ which it was not competent to investigate, or allows a claim in express violation of the Code, as for example, after the execution sale⁴ or against mortgaged property which was brought for sale,⁵ the High Court will interfere.

As in the case of applications under O. 21 R. 89 so in applications under R. 90, only a first appeal is provided by Section 104 and O. 43 R. 1 clause (i).¹⁸ But if the application raises a question concerning the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of Section 47 and when no petition is put in under R. 89, the executing Court is bound to decide it and the decision so given being a decree, a second appeal will lie.¹⁹ An instance of the kind is to be found where a sale is held without issuing a proper notice provided by O. 21 R. 22.²⁰ When a Court rejects an application to set aside a sale summarily²¹ or without allowing the petitioner an opportunity to substantiate his allegations²² or without considering the evidence let in by him²³ or by misapplying the law of limitation,²⁴ it was held to be a sufficient ground for interference. refusing an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis is a case decided.¹¹ The Nagpur and Sind Judicial Commissioners' Courts have maintained the distinction pointed out by the Allahabad Court though interference would be made only in cases where there is some material illegality or irregularity in the procedure adopted by the lower Court in rejecting the application.¹² In Oudh¹³ the application in forma pauperis was itself held to be a "case decided" and therefore if the lower Court committed an irregularity in deciding it, it could be revised whether the application was allowed or rejected. This view, it is submitted, is the correct view, and has been upheld by all the other High Courts. The Madras, Patna and Rangoon High Courts¹⁴ have also rejected the distinction referred to above between the rejection and the allowing of the application. Accordingly when the lower Court, after considering the whole question of pauperism and in the exercise of discretion comes to a proper decision it will not be interfered with when there is no error of jurisdiction.¹⁵ If, on the other hand, the lower Court commits an irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction as where it declines to give notice to the Government Pleader or to the defendant before disposing of the application,¹⁶ or where it does not properly consider the

there is a refusal to exercise jurisdiction in the matter and try the case on the merits unless the additional court-fee demanded is paid.¹ But a decision holding that the court-fee paid is sufficient is, it has been held, not subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court as there is no refusal to exercise jurisdiction in such cases.² See also the undermentioned decision.³ For fuller discussion see Section 149 Note 14 and Order 7 Rule 11 Note 12.

30. Sanction to prosecute.—Prior to 1902, the Allahabad¹ and Madras High particulars of charges as in a case for perjury, and forgery⁵ or to consider a case on its merits⁶ constituted a material irregularity. Similarly, where sanction is given on facts which do not establish any offence⁷ or on evidence legally inadmissible,⁸ the order is reversible.

But though the applications in all such cases lie on the civil revisional side of the High Court and not on the criminal revisional side, the Chief Justice could, under Section 108 of the Government of India Act of 1915, direct a Bench exercising criminal jurisdiction to deal with the case.⁹ The procedure prescribed would however be one under the Civil Procedure Code.¹⁰

When action under Section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, is taken by a subordinate Criminal Court, the High Court may revise the proceedings under Section 439, Criminal Procedure Code.¹¹

Having regard to the view that revision against an order granting sanction to prosecute is under Section 115, it is competent to the Court to award costs of the petition.¹² Some recent cases of the Calcutta High Court have taken the view that Section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, creates a special jurisdiction and provides in clause 6 the machinery for the correction of possible errors committed by the primary Court and consequently the party who seeks relief must have recourse only to such machinery and cannot invoke the aid of this Section.¹³ In a recent Full Bench decision¹⁴ the Bombay High Court has held, agreeing with the undermentioned decision of the Lahore High Court,¹⁵ that an application in revision from an order under Section 476B of the Criminal Procedure Code by a Civil Court to the High Court should be heard and decided by the High Court in accordance with the provisions of Section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

only in the year 1919. Before that, the decisions were not uniform as the original Clause allowed an appeal to the High Court from the judgment of a single Judge or of one Judge of a Division Bench in pursuance of Section 13 of the Charter Act. By Section 13 the High Courts are empowered to exercise original and appellate jurisdiction. The question then arose whether revisional jurisdiction was a part of the appellate jurisdiction vested by Section 13 of the High Courts Act. If it did include it, then an appeal was held to lie from an order of a single Judge made under this Section, provided it amounted to a "judgment." The Allahabad² and Bombay³ High Courts took the view that an order refusing to send for the records of a case did not amount to a judgment, as Clause 15 of the Letters Patent referred only to judgments passed in civil original suits and to orders passed by a single Judge disposing of original and appellate work. Obviously it was thought that "appellate" powers did not include revisional jurisdiction. The Madras High Court⁴ interpreted the words "appellate jurisdiction" referred to in Section 13 of the Charter Act as exhaustive and so inclusive of revisional powers. Consequently an appeal was held to lie from a judgment of a single Judge under this Section. The rejection of a petition⁵ under this Section was held not to amount to a "judgment" as the Court does not enter into the controversy between the parties, but only declines to interfere.⁶ But later cases of the High Court of Madras took the view that even if the single Judge declined to interfere in revision his order amounted to a "judgment" and was hence held to be appealable.⁷ As has been noticed before, under the present Letters Patent no such appeal lies. There can be no review or re-hearing of an application for revision dismissed for default.⁸ The proper course is to prefer a second application for revision.⁹ An application for review may also be treated as one for revision.¹⁰

SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO THE CHARTERED HIGH COURTS

116. [S. 631.] This Part applies only to High Courts which are, or may hereafter be, constituted by His Majesty by Letters Patent.
3. Substituted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, for "established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915."
1. Amendment after 1908. — See foot-note (a) to the text of the Section.

[1877, S. 632. See Ss. 120, 129 and O. 49 R. 3.]

1. Scope of the Section. — This Section declares that the provisions of the Code shall apply to Chartered High Courts also save as otherwise provided in Parts IX and X of the Code or in rules.¹ Thus, Sections 16, 17, and 20 of the Code are declared by Section 120 in this Part (IX) to be inapplicable to the High Court in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction. Again, under Section 129 of the Code, the High Court can make rules as to its own procedure in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction and such rules will prevail over the provisions of the Code.² For rules not applicable to Chartered High Courts, see O. 49 R. 3. See also Notes to Section 114.

2. Rules include forms. — "Rules" means rules and forms contained in the First Schedule or made under Section 122 or Section 125. See Section 2 (18), ante.

3. Security for costs in Letters Patent Appeals. — It follows from what has been said in Note 1 above that O. 41 R. 10 will apply to Letters Patent appeals

also unless the High Court has, under Section 129, made a rule inconsistent with it.¹ The Bombay High Court has framed such a rule (being Rule 725 of the Bombay High Court Rules) and therefore O. 41 R. 10 has been held not to apply to Letters Patent appeals in the Bombay High Court.²

4. Review in Letters Patent Appeals. — It has been seen in Note 1 to Section 114 that there is a difference of opinion among the several High Courts in India on the maintainability of an application for review of decrees in appeals under the Letters Patent. In cases where such review lies, appeals from orders passed on such applications for review are governed by the provisions of Order 47 Rule 7.¹

5. Letters Patent Appeals. — See Section 104, Note 6 and Notes on Clause 15 of the Letters Patent (Madras, Bombay and Calcutta).

118. [S. 634.] Where any such High Court considers it necessary that a decree passed in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction should be executed before the amount of the costs incurred in the suit can be ascertained by taxation, the Court may order that the decree shall be executed forthwith, except as to so much thereof as relates to the costs ;

and, as to so much thereof as relates to the costs, that the decree may be executed as soon as the amount of the costs shall be ascertained by taxation.

1. Taxation of costs and limitation.—Where a decree provides for payment of costs “when taxed and noted”, limitation for the execution of the decree as to costs runs from the date of such taxation.¹

1. Scope of the Section.—It has been held that the words "the power of the High Court" to make rules concerning "advocates, vakils and attorneys" in this Section are not limited to the power of the High Court under Clauses 9 and 10 of the Letters Patent to make rules for the admission of advocates, vakils and attorneys and to their professional conduct, and that they also include the power of the High Court under the Government of India Act, 1915, to make rules regulating the practice of the Court.

3. Right of Vakils to appear or plead or act on the original side.—See Letters Patent, Clauses 9 and 10.

Synopsis

3. Original civil jurisdiction.

1. Amendments made after 1908.—Originally this Section had another sub-section which corresponded to Section 639 of the old Code. It ran as follows:—

"(3) Nothing in this Code shall extend or apply to any Judge of the High Court in the exercise of jurisdiction as an Insolvent Court."

That sub-section was repealed by the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, III of 1909, Section 127 and Schedule III thereof.

2. Scope of the Section.—This Section declares that Sections 16, 17 and 20 of the Code shall not apply to the Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their

PART X. RULES

121. [New.] The rules in the First Schedule shall have effect as if enacted in the body of this Code until annulled or altered in accordance with the provisions of this Part.

Effect of rules in First Schedule.

1. Rules. — The re-arrangement of the Code into the "body of the Code" and "Rules," is for the purpose of giving a much needed elasticity to judicial procedure, and to enable minor defects to be remedied, as they arise, without resort to the Legislature.¹ But, except for the fact that the rules in the First Schedule can be amended, annulled or added to by the High Courts, such rules have the same force as if enacted in the body of the Code and it is incorrect to say that they are not so imperative as the Sections in the body of the Code.²

The whole of this Part is new except Sections 129, 130 and 131 which correspond to Section 652 of the old Code.

The rules passed in accordance with the procedure in this Part, are not on the same footing as the circulars in the Manual of Civil Circulars issued by the High Court. Unless the latter is passed under some enactment which gives it the force of law, it would not have the force of law.³

See Section 124 for annulment and alteration of rules.

122. High Courts "constituted by His Majesty by Letters Patent" and the Chief Court of Oudh may, from time to time after previous publication, make rules regulating their own procedure and the procedure of the Civil Courts subject to their superintendence, and may by such rules annul, alter or add to all or any of the rules in the First Schedule. of reasons for admission of additional evidence provisions of the Letters Patent.¹ Similarly, they cannot vary the period of limitation fixed by the Limitation Act for any proceeding.² Thus, a rule requiring a copy of the trial Court's judgment to be filed along with the memorandum of second appeal will not entitle the appellant to exclude the time requisite for obtaining such judgment.³ Nor will a rule dispensing with the necessity of filing a copy of judgment appealed from along with the memorandum of appeal disentitle the appellant from excluding the period requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment.⁴ But a rule extending the provisions of Section 5 of the Limitation Act to applications under Order 9 Rule 9⁵ or Rule 13⁶ of the Code is not ultra vires. The reason is that Section 5 of the Limitation Act expressly applies to any application to which it may be made applicable by any enactment or rule for the time being in force.

The rule-making power of the High Courts is confined to the regulation of procedure.⁷ It was held by a Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court that proviso (b) to O. 21 R. 90 introduced by the Rangoon High Court, as such proviso stood before 27th January 1937, took away an existing right and as such was ultra vires.⁸

4. High Courts to which the Section applies. — The Section as it stood prior to its amendment by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order of 1937, applied to High Courts established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, and the Chief Court of Oudh.¹ A High Court within the meaning of the Government of India Act, 1915, is a High Court established in British India by Letters Patent. (See Government of India Act, 1915, Section 10.) The Patna High Court being such a Court, Section 122 applies to it.² In an earlier decision of the Patna High Court it was however held that the Section does not apply to the Patna High Court.³ The reason given was that the Patna High Court was not a High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861. Apparently their Lordships' judgment is based on the Section as it stood prior to the amendment by Act XIII of 1916. At that time, the Section did not contain the expression "or the Government of India Act, 1915." It was inserted in the Section by the Amending Act XIII of 1916. Their Lordships' attention does not seem to have been drawn to this amendment. Since the amendment of the Section by the Adaptation of Indian Laws Order of 1937, the Section clearly applies to all High Courts constituted by His Majesty by Letters Patent.

123. [New.] (1) A Committee, to be called the Rule Committee, shall be constituted at the town which is the usual place of sitting of each of the High Courts and of the Chief Court referred to in section 122.

- (b) By the Repealing and Amending Act XVII of 1919, the words "of the Chief Court" were substituted for the words "Chief Courts." The said words, namely, "of the Chief Court" were, however, repealed by Act XI of 1923. By Act XX of 1925, the words "and of the Chief Court" were again inserted in the Section after the words "High Courts." By Act XXXIV of 1926, the words "Chief Courts" have again been substituted for the words "of the Chief Court."
- (c) In sub-section (2) (a) after the words "District Judge or" the words "in the Punjab or Burma" originally occurred. They were substituted by Act XVIII of 1919 by the words "in Burma." These latter words were also repealed by Act XI of 1923.

124. [New.] Every Rule Committee shall make a report to the High Court established at the town at which it is constituted on any proposal to amend, alter or add to the rules in the First Schedule or to make new rules, and before making any rules under section 122 the High Court shall take such report into consideration.

1. Report of the Rule Committee.—The Rule Committee referred to in the Section is the Rule Committee constituted under Section 123.¹ This Section shows that a rule can be passed under Section 122 only after the opinion of the Rule Committee is taken into consideration. It has been held by the Patna High Court that Section 123 as it originally stood did not apply to the Patna High Court² and that a rule framed by it without reference to a Rule Committee, at a time when there was no Rule Committee in existence, is not ultra vires.³ A contrary view has, however, been taken in a later case of the same High Court.⁴ See Note 4 to Section 122.

125. [New.] High Courts, other than the Courts specified in section 122, may exercise the powers conferred by that section in such manner and subject to such conditions as the Provincial Government may determine:

Provided that any such High Court may, after previous publication, make a rule extending within the local limits of its jurisdiction any rules which have been made by any other High Court.

same approval is made necessary for rules under the provisions in this part of the Code. Neither this Section nor Section 107 of the Government of India Act applies to rules framed by the High Court for the conduct of its own business. Such rule, therefore, need not be sanctioned as required by the Section.¹

127. [New.] Rules so made and approved shall be published in the Official Gazette . . . , and shall from the date of publication or from such other date as may be specified have the same force and effect, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the High Court which made them, as if they had been contained in the First Schedule.

a. Substituted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, Para. 4 (1) for "Gazette of India or in the Local Official Gazette, as the case may be." As under Para. 4 (1) the words "Official Gazette" have to be substituted for "Gazette of India" and also for "Local Official Gazette," the substitution will strictly read "Official Gazette or in the Official Gazette, as the case may be." But the last words are omitted as being redundant.

1. Amendments after 1908.—By Act XXIV of 1917, the word "approved" was substituted for the word "sanctioned" which occurred in the Section as it originally stood.

128. [New.] (1) Such rules shall be not inconsistent with the provisions in the body of this Code, but, subject thereto, may provide for any matters relating to the procedure of Civil Courts.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by sub-section (1) such rules may provide for all or any of the following matters, namely:—

(a) the service of summonses, notices and other processes by post or in any other manner either generally or in any specified areas, and the proof of such service; (b) the maintenance and custody, while under attachment, of live-stock and other moveable property, the fees payable for such maintenance and custody, the sale of such live-stock and property, and the proceeds of such sale;

(c) procedure in suits by way of counter-claim, and the valuation of such suits for the purposes of jurisdiction;

1. Scope of the Section.—This Section enacts that the rules framed under the provisions of this Part may provide for any matter relating to the procedure of Civil Courts and it indicates the sort of rules that may be framed. A rule extending the provisions of Section 5 of the Limitation Act to applications under O. 9 R. 13 of the Code is a matter of procedure and is not ultra vires.¹ But a new rule in lieu of O. 34 R. 2, limiting the right of the mortgagee to recover interest at the mortgage rate for the whole period allowed for redemption is one dealing with substantive rights and is not a rule of procedure. Such a rule will be ultra vires.²

A rule framed under the provisions of this part must not be inconsistent with the provisions in the body of the Code.³ The words "consistent with the body of the Code" mean "consistent with the Sections of the Code" and not with the Rules in the First Schedule which can be altered by the High Court.⁴

This Section relates only to rules to be made under the Code by the High Courts with the advice of the Rule Committee constituted under Section 123. It does not affect the validity of rules framed under the previous Code.⁵

2. Defendant claiming indemnity against third party — Clause (e). — Under this clause rules may be framed relating to procedure when the defendant claims to be entitled to contribution or indemnity against any person whether a party to the suit or not. In England, rules have been framed restricting third party procedure to the cases referred to in Section 128 (2) (e), namely to cases of contribution and indemnity.¹

3. Suit for debts — Summary procedure — Clause (f). — A suit on a negotiable instrument provided for under Order 37 of the Code also falls under the category of suits of the nature referred to in this clause.¹ The period of limitation for a suit under the summary procedure under this clause is six months from the date when the debt or liquidated demand becomes payable or the property becomes recoverable.² Similarly, the period of limitation for an application for leave to defend such a suit is 10 days from the date when the summons is served.³

See also the undermentioned case.⁴

4. Originating summons — Clause (j). — An originating summons means every summons other than a summons in a pending cause or matter.¹ Where the disputed facts are complex and involve a considerable amount of oral evidence, an originating summons is not the proper procedure to be taken.²

It is doubtful whether a rule under the old Code delegating judicial duties to the Registrar and which was, therefore, ultra vires under the old Code is validated by this Section.²

1. Amendments after 1908.—By the Amending Act XIII of 1916, the words and figures "or the Government of India Act, 1915," were inserted, after the words "established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861" which originally occurred in the Section. The words "constituted by His Majesty by Letters Patent" have been substituted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order of 1937 for the words "established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861 or the Government of India Act, 1915."

2. Scope of the Section. — Under this Section, a Chartered High Court may make rules to regulate its own procedure in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction. Such rules need not be consistent with the provisions in the body of the Code but must be consistent with the Letters Patent, establishing the High Court.¹

1. Amendments after 1908.—

By the Amending Act XIII of 1916 the following changes were introduced in the Section:—

(a) The words and figures "or the Government of India Act, 1915" were added after the words "established by the Indian High Courts Act, 1861," which originally occurred in the Section.

(b) The Section as it stood originally, spoke of only the rules that might be made under Section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act of 1861. After the amendment of 1916, it mentioned rules that might be made by High Courts under Section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act of 1861 or under Section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915.

By the Repealing and Amending Act XXIV of 1917 the word "approval" was substituted for the word "sanction."

PART XI.

MISCELLANEOUS

132. [S. 640.] (1) Women who, according to the customs and manners of the country, ought not to be compelled to appear in public shall be exempt from personal appearance in Court.

[1877, S. 640; 1859, S. 21. See O. 26 R. 1.]

Synopsis

1. Customs and manners of the country.
2. "Shall be exempt from personal appearance in Court."
3. Sub-section (2) — Exemption of women from arrest in execution.

1. Customs and manners of the country. — This Section applies to women, who according to the customs and manners of the country, ought not to be compelled to appear in public, e. g., pardashin ladies.¹ The custom set up must not be one of a varying or uncertain character.² The right conferred by the Section does not depend on the rank or station in life of a lady,³ and cannot be refused on the ground that the lady has appeared in public before⁴ or a charge of immorality is made against her.⁵ Even though a lady may have given up the use of the pardah she is entitled to the benefit of the Section, if, having regard to her social position and the feelings of her class, the Court is satisfied that she should not be compelled to appear in the witness-box.⁶ But a lady may completely alter her mode of life and cease to be included in the statutory description of a woman "who, according to the customs and manners of the country, ought not to be compelled to appear in public." When this transformation has taken place, she can no longer claim, as of right, the statutory exemption formulated in Section 132.⁷

2. "Shall be exempt from personal appearance in Court." — The exemption from personal appearance under this Section is a right which no Court has power to refuse,¹ and applies to parties as well as witnesses.² According to the Calcutta High Court the exemption is only in respect of appearance and not attendance in Court. Women can be compelled to come to Court, so long as they do not become visible to the public gaze.³ The High Court of Allahabad has, however, held that the words "personal appearance" used in the Section mean "personal attendance" and that an exempted person cannot be compelled to attend Court.⁴ The Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has also taken the same view.⁵ If a commission is issued for the examination of a woman entitled to the benefit of this Section, she cannot decline to be examined at any place other than of her own choice.⁶

As to exemption from personal appearance in Court in criminal cases, see Criminal Procedure Code, Section 503 and the undermentioned cases.⁷ See Sections 20 and 32 (ii) of the C. P. Land Revenue Act (II of 1917) and Section 53 (2) of the Bombay Salt Act (II of 1890) for the application of this Section and Section 133 to proceedings under the said Acts.

3. Sub-section (2). — Exemption of women from arrest in execution. — The Code exempts women from arrest in execution of money decrees (see Section 56) and decrees for restitution of conjugal rights (see O. 21 R. 32).

133. [S. 641.] (1) The Provincial Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, exempt from personal appearance in Court any person whose rank, in the opinion of such Government, entitles him to the privilege of exemption.

Exemption of
other persons.

(2) The names and residences of the persons so exempted shall, from time to time, be forwarded to the High Court by the Provincial Government and a list of such persons shall be kept in such Court, and a list of such persons as reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of each Court subordinate to the High Court shall be kept in such subordinate Court.

Synopsis

1. Legislative changes.
2. Scope of the Section.

1. Legislative changes. — The words "and may, by like notification, withdraw such privilege" which occurred in the corresponding Section 641 of the former Code have been omitted in the present Section.

2. Scope of the Section. — No person, of whatever position and respectability he may be, is entitled to exemption from personal appearance under this Section in the absence of a notification by the Government, even though it may be derogatory to his dignity to attend personally in Court as a witness.¹ But where a notification under this Section exists, the exemption is absolute and not even the Court suo motu can compel personal attendance.² See also Notes under Order 26 Rule 1.

134. [New.] The provisions of sections 55, 57 and 59 Arrest other than in execution of decree. shall apply, so far as may be, to all persons arrested under this Code.

1. Scope of the Section. — Sections 55, 57 and 59 refer in terms to the arrest of a judgment-debtor, i. e., to arrest in execution of a decree. The present Section makes the provisions of those Sections applicable to all arrests under the Code.

135. [S. 642 and compare Ss. 572 and 573.] (1) No Judge, Magistrate or other judicial officer shall be Exemption from arrest liable to arrest under civil process while going to, presiding in, or returning from, his Court.

(2) Where any matter is pending before a tribunal³ having jurisdiction therein, or believing in good faith that it has such jurisdiction, the parties⁴ thereto, their pleaders, mukhtars, revenue-agents and recognized agents, and their witnesses acting in obedience to a summons, shall be exempt from arrest under civil process⁵

1. Legislative changes. — The following changes should be noted :

- (a) The words "and except as provided in section 337 A, sub-section (5) and sections 256 and 643" which occurred in the beginning of sub-section (2) of the corresponding Section 642 of the Code of 1882 have been omitted.
- (b) The words "other than process issued by such tribunal for contempt of Court" in sub-section (2) are new. See Note 3.
- (c) Sub-section (3) is new.

2. Scope and object of Section. — The exemption conferred by this Section is not for the personal benefit of the individual, but for the furthering of public interest and the better administration of justice.¹

The privilege is really that of the Court and the principle on which it is founded is that freedom from the fear of arrest encourages willing attendance and thus tends to the advancement of justice.²

In cases in which this Section does not, in terms apply, the English law should be followed. The English law in this respect is approximately the same as the law under the Section.³

3. No exemption in case of process for contempt of Court. — It was held by the Calcutta High Court that the exemption created does not apply in the case of process issued for contempt of Court.¹ The Section has been amended in the present Code so as to give effect to that ruling.

- 9. Remedies of exempted person on being illegally arrested.—A person who is arrested in contravention of this Section has various remedies:
- (1) He can apply for his release to the Court which ordered his arrest¹ or to the High Court under S. 491 (1) (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code.²
 - (2) On being released from such illegal arrest, he is entitled to a refund of the sum paid by him to obtain his release.³
 - (3) He cannot, however, maintain a suit for damages for illegal arrest in the absence of proof of malice and want of reasonable cause.⁴
 - (4) He can prosecute the person causing the arrest for an offence under Section 342 of the Indian Penal Code.⁵
- 10. Appeal.—An order disallowing a claim to exemption from arrest under this Section is one falling under Section 47 and as such is appealable.¹

1. Scope. — This Section is new. It was inserted into the Code by Act XXIII of 1925. Its object is to confer on members of the Imperial and Provincial Legislatures immunity from arrest and imprisonment under civil process to the extent necessary to enable them to discharge their duties as members of such Legislatures.

136. [S. 648.] (1) Where an application is made that any person shall be arrested or that any property shall be attached under any provision of this Code not relating to the execution of decrees, and such person resides or such property is situate outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court to which the application is made, the Court may, in its discretion, issue a warrant of arrest or make an order of attachment, and send to the District Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such person or property resides or is situate a copy of the warrant or order, together with the probable amount of the costs of the arrest or attachment.

Procedure where person to be arrested or property to be attached is outside district.

(2) The District Court shall, on receipt of such copy and amount, cause the arrest or attachment to be made by its own officers, or by a Court subordinate to itself, and shall inform the Court which issued or made such warrant or order of the arrest or attachment.

(3) The Court making an arrest under this section shall send the person arrested to the Court by which the warrant of arrest was issued, unless he shows cause to the satisfaction of the former Court why he should not be sent to the latter Court, or unless he furnishes sufficient security for his appearance before the latter Court or for satisfying any decree that may be passed against him by that Court, in either of which cases the Court making the arrest shall release him.

1. Legislative changes. —

This Section corresponds to Section 648 of the former Code. The chief alteration made is that the words "where an application is made" have been substituted in the place of the words "where any Court desires." As to the effect of this alteration, see Note 7.

Alterations prior to Code of 1908 :

The words in the Code of 1877, "outside the district within which the Court issuing the warrant of arrest or making the order of attachment is situated" were converted in the Code of 1882 into the words "outside the local limits of its jurisdiction." As to the effect of this alteration, see Note 5. It may be noted that there is no material change in this respect in the present Code.

2. The arrest or attachment must be under any provision of the Code.

— This Section in terms applies only to cases in which the arrest or attachment has been ordered under any provision of the Code. Hence it applies to an order for arrest under O. 39 R. 2 for disobedience of a temporary injunction.¹ As to order for arrest for contempt of Court, see Note 4.

3. Such arrest or attachment to be otherwise than in execution of a decree.

— The Section expressly provides that the procedure laid down by it does not apply to arrest or attachment in execution of a decree. The procedure to be followed in such cases is laid down in Section 39, ante.

4. Order of arrest for contempt of Court. — An order for arrest for contempt of Court passed by a Judge on the original side of the High Court is not one

7. Power of Court to order attachment before judgment of property situated outside its jurisdiction. — Under the former Code there was a conflict of decisions as to whether a Court had the power to order the attachment before judgment of property outside its jurisdiction. On the one hand it was held that under Sections 483 and 484 (corresponding to the present O. 38 R. 5) a Court could not attach before judgment property outside its jurisdiction. It was further held that the old Section 648 (corresponding to Section 136) did not enlarge the Court's power in this respect and that that Section applied only where the Court had power to order such attachment under any other provision of the Code.¹ On the other hand, it was held that under Section 648 a Court did have the power to order the attachment before judgment of property situated outside its local jurisdiction.² Under the present Code, the words in the old Sections 483 and 484 which imposed the restrictions as to the property being within the Court's jurisdiction have been omitted in O. 38 R. 5 and the words "where any Court desires" in Section 648 have been replaced in the present Section by the words "where an application is made." Hence, there is no room for doubt under the present Code that Section 136 read with O. 38 R. 5 (1) (a) empowers a Court to order the attachment before judgment of property situated outside its jurisdiction.³

137. [S. 645 and compare Ss. 49, 200, 201.] (1) The language of sub-ordinate Courts. Code, is the language of any Court subordinate to a High Court shall continue to be the language of such subordinate Court until the Provincial Government otherwise directs.

(2) The Provincial Government may declare what shall be the language of any such Court and in what character applications to and proceedings in such Courts shall be written.

(3) Where this Code requires or allows anything other than the recording of evidence to be done in writing in any such Court, such writing may be in English; but if any party or his pleader is unacquainted with English a translation into the language of the Court shall, at his request, be supplied to him; and the Court shall make such order as it thinks fit in respect of the payment of the costs of such translation.

a. Substituted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, for "Local Government."

1. Sub-section (3). — This Section corresponds to Section 645 of the former Code. Sub-section (3) is new. It deals with writings other than the record of evidence. Hence pleadings and applications may be in English subject to a translation being supplied to the other side where necessary. Compare Section 138 and O. 18 R. 9.

lays down the circumstances under which affidavits may be used as a mode of proof. The present Section declares the persons who are competent to administer the oath to the deponent in cases where affidavits can be used as a mode of proof.

3. "Any Court or Magistrate"—Clause (a).—The person before whom an affidavit is sworn must be acting in the capacity of a Court or of the officer authorized to administer an oath.¹ Hence, an affidavit sworn in the Bar Library before a pleader who is also an Honorary Magistrate is not admissible under this Section.²

A Village Munsif under the Madras Village Courts Act (1888) is a Court within the meaning of this clause.³

4. Any officer or other person appointed by the High Court—Clause (b).—The expression "other person" shows that the person appointed by the High Court need not necessarily be an officer.

1. Legislative changes. —

- (1). The words "herein prescribed" have been changed into "provided in this Code in regard to suits."
- (2). The words "other than suits and appeals" have been omitted.

2. To what proceedings the Section applies. — The corresponding Section of the former Code (Section 647) as it originally stood ran as follows :

"The procedure herein prescribed shall be followed, so far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction other than suits or appeals."

In interpreting this Section there arose a conflict of views as to whether proceedings in execution were "proceedings other than suits or appeals" to which this Section could be applied.¹ In order to set this conflict at rest the Legislature, by Act VI of 1892, added an Explanation to the Section as follows :

"Explanation. — This Section does not apply to applications for the execution of decrees which are proceedings in suits."

In the year 1894, however, the Privy Council had occasion to deal with the question in a case² which arose before the explanation was added to the Section and their Lordships observed as follows :

"Their Lordships think that the proceedings spoken of in Section 647 include original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probates, guardianships and so forth and do not include executions Their Lordships' attention has been called to the recent Act VI of 1892 which would appear to have been passed in order to avoid the disturbance of practice caused by the Allahabad rulings their Lordships have thought it right to state their opinion that the Act of 1892 does nothing more than express the true meaning of the Civil Procedure Code."

The explanation and the words "other than suits and appeals" were thus rendered superfluous and unnecessary and have accordingly been omitted from the present Section. As a result it would therefore seem to be clear that Section 141 does not apply to any proceedings in execution" but only to proceedings which are original matters in the nature of suits. There has however been a conflict of opinion in respect of the following points, due to different interpretations of the said Privy Council decision:

- (1) Whether proceedings under Order 21 Rules 89, 90, 91, 97 and 100 are proceedings in execution or original matters in the nature of suits?
- (2) Whether an application to restore a suit dismissed for default is an original matter in the nature of a suit?

(3) Whether Section 141 applies only to original matters or to all matters whether original or not, provided they are not execution proceedings? On the first point all the Courts except the High Court of Patna and the Chief Court of Oudh have held that such proceedings are proceedings in execution, and that

Section 141 cannot be applied thereto.⁴ A Full Bench decision of the Patna High Court⁵ has held that a proceeding under O. 21 R. 90 is one in execution. But in the undermentioned decisions of the same High Court⁶ it has been held, distinguishing the Full Bench case, that a proceeding under O. 21 R. 100 is an original matter in the nature of suits to which Section 141 can be applied. The Oudh Chief Court has held that a proceeding under O. 21 R. 90 is an original matter and that Section 141 applies thereto.⁷

On the second point the High Courts of Madras⁸ and Lahore,⁹ the Chief Court of Oudh¹⁰ and the Judicial Commissioner's Court at Nagpur¹¹ hold that such a proceeding is an original matter and that therefore an application under O. 9 R. 9, will lie to restore a petition under O. 9 R. 9, which is itself dismissed for default. The Allahabad,¹² Calcutta¹³ and Patna¹⁴ High Courts are inclined to the view that such a proceeding is not an original proceeding to which Section 141 applies. - The following are not proceedings of the kind contemplated by the Section —

 - (2) Proceedings under Order 21 Rule 58.³⁸

But independent of this Section some of the provisions of the Code may apply directly and of their own force to matters which do not come within the meaning of the word "proceedings" as defined by the Privy Council.³⁹ Thus, a proceeding in execution can be reviewed under O. 47 R. 1 by force of its own language and not by virtue of Section 141.⁴⁰

In the undermentioned decision⁴¹ the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court expressed the view that the provisions of Order 7 apply, by reason of this Section, to memoranda of appeals and that an appeal can be rejected under O. 7 R. 11. It is submitted that the view is not correct as an appeal is not an original proceeding. But, O. 7 R. 11 will apply to appeals by reason of the provisions of Section 107 ante. (See Notes to Section 107.)

3. Appeals in execution matters.—As Section 141 does not apply to execution proceedings but only to original matters in the nature of suits, it is conceived that it does not apply to appeals from orders in execution.¹ But independently of Section 141, some of the provisions of the Code in regard to appeals may apply directly to appeals from orders in execution. Thus, where an order in execution is appealed from as a decree under Section 47, the Appellate Court may require the appellant to give security for costs under O. 41 R. 10.² Similarly, the Appellate Court can stay execution of the decree under Section 47 independently of Section 141 and of O. 41 R. 5.³

4. Proceedings for restitution. — Section 141 does not make Section 144 of the Code applicable to execution proceedings.¹ As to the inherent powers of the Court to order restitution in such cases, see Section 144, Note 34.

5. Letters Patent Appeal. — Letters Patent Appeals are not original proceedings of the kind contemplated by Section 141.¹ But by virtue of Section 117 of the Code, the provisions of the Code are applicable to High Courts except as provided in Part IX or Part X or in Rules. Hence the provisions of the Code may be followed in Letters Patent Appeals.²

6. "Court of civil jurisdiction." — The proceedings to which Section 141 applies are proceedings in a Court of civil jurisdiction. A proceeding under the Lunacy Act, 1912, is a "proceeding in a Court of civil jurisdiction." Consequently, the provisions of the Code as to verification of pleadings apply to such a proceeding.¹ Disciplinary proceedings under the Legal Practitioners' Act are, according to the High Courts of Madras² and Calcutta,³ "proceedings in a Court of civil jurisdiction." The High Court of Patna, on the other hand, has held that they are not.⁴ Proceedings under Section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code for sanction to prosecute are not civil proceedings although they may be before the Judge of a Civil Court.⁵ A Revenue Court is a Court of civil jurisdiction.⁶

7. "Procedure provided in this Code." — Section 141 deals with procedure and procedure alone.¹ It does not confer any substantive right not expressly given elsewhere by the Code. Thus, a right of appeal² cannot be claimed merely on the strength of Section 141.³ Similarly, the Section does not confer a right to refer to

Similarly, the principle that a suit against a dead man is not maintainable, is a point of substance and not of procedure, and cannot therefore be applied to an application to set aside an ex parte decree, so as to make it incompetent by reason of the fact that the deceased plaintiff's name, instead of his legal representatives, appears in the application as a party.⁸

But Sections 10 and 11⁹ and O. 39 R. 1¹⁰ of the Code are rules of procedure and may therefore be applied to "proceedings" within the meaning of Section 141.

8. "In regard to suits."—The word "suits" in Section 141 is used in a comprehensive sense so as to include appeals which are only continuations of suits. Hence, the procedure prescribed by the Code in regard to appeals governs appeals arising out of miscellaneous proceedings and miscellaneous proceedings in the nature of appeals.¹

9. "As far as it can be made applicable."—Section 141 does not make the whole of the procedure in regard to suits applicable to proceedings under the Section. Such procedure applies only as far as it can be made applicable.¹ Thus, the appointment of a guardian cannot be referred to arbitration because guardianship is not a matter purely of private right.² Similarly, a surety for a guardian cannot be proceeded against in execution under Section 145, Civil Procedure Code, because even the guardian himself cannot be proceeded against in execution in that way.³ So also, though the procedure laid down in Order 22 requiring a plaintiff to bring on record the legal representatives of a deceased defendant may apply to applications to sue in forma pauperis, it does not follow that the penalties provided in O. 22 R. 4 can, without express provision in that behalf, apply to such applications.⁴

restitution.

144. [S. 583.] (1) Where and in so far as a decree is varied or reversed,³ the Court of first instance¹⁷ shall, on the application of any party entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise, cause such restitution to be made¹⁹ as will, so far as may be,²¹ place the parties in the position which they would have occupied²⁰ but for such decree or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed; and, for this purpose, the Court may make any orders, including orders for the refund of costs and for the payment of interest,²³ damages, compensation and mesne profits,²² which are properly consequential on such variation or reversal.

(2) No suit²⁹ shall be instituted for the purpose of obtaining any restitution or other relief which could be obtained by application under sub-section (1).

Section 144 — Note 1

I. S. 583 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows: — "Where a party entitled to any benefit (by way of restitution or otherwise) under a decree passed in an appeal under this chapter desires to obtain execution of the same, he shall apply to the Court and the same has now been recast in sub-section (1) of this Section "so as to bring it into closer conformity with that practice."²

Sub-section (2), barring the institution of suits for relief claimable under this Section, is new. It compels litigants to have matters falling within the Section cleared up in proceedings under this Section only.³ It necessarily implies the widest possible construction of sub-section (1).⁴

2. Scope and object of the Section. — It is a cardinal principle of law that the acts of Courts should not be allowed to work injury on the suitors.¹ In the leading English case of Rodger v. Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris,² Lord Cairns said :

"One of the first and highest duties of all Courts is to take care that the act of the Court does no injury to the suitors and when the expression 'the act of the Court' is used it does not mean merely the act of the primary Court or of any intermediate Court of appeal but the act of the Court as a whole from the lowest Court which entertains jurisdiction over the matter to the highest Court which finally disposes of the case."

The doctrine of restitution is based upon this principle³ and contemplates a case where property has been received by the decree-holder under his decree and the decree is subsequently wholly or partially reversed or varied in other proceedings. In such a case the law raises an obligation on the party who received the benefit of the erroneous judgment to make restitution to the other party for what he had lost;⁴ and this obligation, it is the duty of the Courts to enforce, unless it is shown that restitution would be clearly contrary to the real justice of the case.⁵

Section 144 only embodies this doctrine of restitution and does not confer any new substantive rights which a successful party did not possess under the general law.⁶ It merely regulates the exercise of the rights and prescribes a convenient procedure therefor.⁷

The Section is a salutary provision of law enacted with a view to shorten litigation and to afford speedy relief and should not, therefore, be narrowly construed.⁸

which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred; and such Court shall proceed to execute the decree passed in appeal, according to the rules hereinbefore prescribed for execution of decrees in suits."

Again, the Section will apply only where a decree is varied or reversed. It will not apply where an order (which is not a decree) is varied or reversed³ though in such cases, the Court can order restitution under its inherent powers, on the analogy of Section 144.⁴ The Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court has however held that the word "decree" in Section 144 covers an "order".⁵ The decision is clearly against the definition of the word "decree" in Section 2 (2) of the Code and further, the decisions cited by that Court in support of its view do not bear it out. The decision cannot therefore be accepted as sound.

4. Modes of variation and reversal. — Section 583 of the old Code allowed restitution only in cases where the decree was reversed in appeal preferred under Chapters 41 and 42 of that Code, corresponding to Orders 41 and 42 of the present Code. It did not, therefore apply to variations and reversal otherwise than in appeal¹ nor to a variation or reversal in appeal to the Privy Council.²

This Section contains no such restriction as to the manner in which a decree should be varied or reversed and none can be legitimately read into it, except, of course, that it should be in "accordance with law."³ The Section has also been transferred to the Chapter headed "Miscellaneous" from its position in the Chapter headed "Appeals from Original Decrees" under the old Code. The effect of it is to extend its operation to all cases of reversals, howsoever the variation has been effected.⁴

merits.² As to the effect of the subsequent passing of the same decree, where the sale has not been set aside before the passing of such decree, see Note 20, infra.

6. Effect of reversal of main decree on dependent decrees. — It is a general rule of law that upon a reversal of a judgment, order or decree, all connected or dependent judgments or orders fall with it.¹

Illustrations

1. A obtains a preliminary decree for partition against B. Pending appeal by B therefrom, A obtains a final decree, executes it and recovers money from B. The preliminary decree is then set aside by the Appellate Court. B is entitled to claim restitution from A of the amount recovered from him. The reason is that no effect remains in the final decree after the reversal of the preliminary decree.²

2. A obtains a decree for enhanced rent against B. Pending appeal by B therefrom, A files another suit against B for enhanced rent for another period and obtains a decree conditional on the first decree being confirmed in appeal, and recovers money from B in execution of that decree. The first decree is subsequently reversed on appeal. Held, that B is entitled to claim restitution from A of the money recovered from him under the second decree, as it was made conditional on the confirmation of the first decree and became infructuous on its being reversed in appeal.³

7. Who may apply for restitution. — In order to entitle a person to apply under this Section two conditions must be satisfied —

- (1) He must be a party to the decree varied or reversed,¹ and
- (2) He must have become "entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise" under the reversing decree.² But it is not necessary that the decree by which the original decree is reversed or varied should declare the party's right to restitution. Where the effect of the decree of the Appellate Court is to reverse that of the lower Court, the party against whom the lower Court's erroneous decree has been enforced and who has lost possession of the property is entitled to apply for restitution under this Section irrespective of the question whether or not the appellate decree declares the party's right to the property.³

In either case the auction-purchaser is entitled to a return of the purchase price less the mesne profits he has enjoyed. In fact where an auction sale is set aside it is incumbent upon the Court to order that the recovery of possession by the judgment-debtor is made conditional on his paying up to the purchaser the purchase-money.²

Where, however, no such conditional order is passed, can the auction-purchaser apply under this Section for the return of the purchase-money? It has been held that he cannot. The reason is that he is neither a party to the decree varied or reversed nor is he a person entitled to any benefit under the reversing decree.³

He may, of course, sue the judgment-debtor for a refund of his purchase-money.⁴

11. Against whom restitution can be granted. — Under Section 583 of the Code of 1882 an appellate decree reversing a decree of the lower Court had to contain, or was deemed to contain, a direction for restitution in favour of the successful appellant, who had, in order to claim restitution, to execute the appellate decree. This, of course, could not be done against a person who was not a party to the appellate decree.

It was therefore held that the transferee of a decree reversed in appeal, or other person who was not a party to the appeal, could not be proceeded against under the Section.¹

who is in possession thereof, in ejectment, and obtains a decree and gets delivery of possession in execution. Pending appeal by B, C sues on his mortgage, obtains a decree and purchases the property in execution of his decree and obtains possession. A's decree is reversed in appeal. Held, B can claim restitution from C of the property taken from him. The reason is that C is a representative of A and cannot be in a better position than A.³

Where the liability to make restitution is a joint one, a claim against some only of the persons liable in the absence of the others is not sustainable.⁴

Restitution can be ordered under this Section only against a party who has benefited under the reversed decree.⁵ Thus, suppose that in a suit for possession A obtains a decree against B and his usufructuary mortgagees. The decree being reversed on appeal B is given possession instead of the mortgagees. Here the mortgagees cannot claim the mortgaged property from B by way of restitution. The reason is that B was given possession of the property not under the reversed decree of the lower Court but under the reversing decree of the Appellate Court.⁶

12. Transferee of a decree. — See Note 11 above.

13. Auction-purchaser. — The question whether restitution can be claimed against an auction-purchaser on the reversal of the decree in execution of which the sale took place, depends upon the question whether he is a bona fide purchaser. By the phrase "bona fide purchaser" the Courts imply the test of knowledge of the pending proceedings to set aside the decree, and opportunity to defend his own interests in those proceedings.¹

In the case of bona fide purchasers the rule is that the sale will be upheld notwithstanding the reversal of the decree,² because otherwise there will be less inducement to intending purchasers to buy at an execution sale, and consequently less chance of property fetching proper value at such sales.³ Another reason is that a purchaser cannot be expected to go behind the judgment to inquire into the irregularities in the suit.⁴

This, however, does not mean that an execution sale cannot be set aside on other grounds such as want of jurisdiction to sell the property,⁵ fraud,⁶ want of saleable interest in the judgment-debtor⁷ and, the sale being affected by the doctrine of lis pendens,⁸ etc. In such cases restitution can be ordered against the auction-purchaser⁹ under the inherent powers of the Court.¹⁰

The reason of the rule upholding an execution sale in favour of a bona fide purchaser disappears where the decree-holder is himself the purchaser, and has notice of all the proceedings in the suit. The rule itself consequently becomes inapplicable in accordance with the maxim cessante ratione legis, cessat et ipsa lex.¹¹ The decree-holder purchaser will therefore be bound, on the reversal of the decree, to make restitution to the person entitled thereto.¹² An assignee from such purchaser will be in no better position than his assignor though he is a bona fide purchaser from the decree-holder,¹³ unless the reversal of the decree has been obtained fraudulently by the decree-holder himself after the assignment.¹⁴

In the principles enunciated above there is no distinction between the auction-purchaser at a sale in execution of a money decree and that in execution of a mortgage decree.¹⁵

The above discussion relates to cases where the decree of the first Court is reversed subsequently. Where the decree is modified the sale need not necessarily be set aside even in cases where the decree-holder is the purchaser. See Note 20 infra.

16. Trustee. — Where a trustee of a temple obtains a decree and in execution thereof recovers money and hands it over to the temple and then the decree is reversed in appeal, restitution can be had only against the temple and not against the trustee personally.¹

17. What Court can grant restitution. — Section 583 of the old Code required that the person entitled to restitution "shall apply to the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred." Thus, where a first Appellate Court reverses a decree of the original Court, which reversal is again set aside by the second Appellate Court, it was held that the application should be made to the first Appellate Court against whose decree the second appeal was preferred and not to the original Court.¹

Under the present Section, the application should be made in all cases to "the Court of first instance." It is only the Court which executes the decree that has jurisdiction to order restitution to the parties.²

Where the Court of first instance loses its territorial jurisdiction or ceases to exist, the Court which gets such jurisdiction will be "the Court of first instance."³

Where a decree is transferred for execution to another Court, the latter Court can exercise the same powers as the Court of first instance.⁴

The jurisdiction of the Court of first instance is not ousted by the fact that the value of the subject-matter of the restitution exceeds the limits of its pecuniary jurisdiction,⁵ nor by the fact that after its decree has been set aside, the case has been transferred for re-hearing to another Court.⁶

18. Extent of power to grant restitution. — Before the passing of the Code of 1908, there was no legislative expression as to the extent of the power of the Court to make restitution. This Section now specifies that the power extends to "cause such restitution to be made as will, so far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such a decree as has been varied or reversed." The

Courts ought not to adopt a narrow construction so as to restrict the application of this salutary provision of law which has been enacted with a view to shorten litigation, and afford speedy relief.¹ In L. Guran Ditta v. T. R. Ditta,² their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows :

"The duty of the Court when awarding restitution under Section 144 of the Code is imperative. It shall place the applicant in the position in which he would have been if the order had not been made : and for this purpose the Court is armed with powers (the 'may' is empowering, not discretionary) as to mesne profits, interest and so forth."

19. "Shall cause restitution to be made." — The Section is mandatory.¹ The Court has no discretion to grant restitution or not, in matters falling within the terms of the Section.² It is the legal effect of a decree of reversal that a party against whom the decree reversed was given is to have restitution of all that he had been deprived of under it.³ It is not necessary that the reversing decree should contain any direction or provision for restitution.⁴

But in cases not falling within the terms of the Section restitution is not a matter of right but depends upon the discretion of the Court and will be ordered only when the justice of the case demands it.⁵

20. "Place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree as has been varied or reversed." — The object of restitution is to restore the status quo ante between the parties.¹ Under the old Code the power of

1. ('17) AIR 1917 Mad 185 (185) : 40 Mad 780.

The restoration is to be as nearly as possible to their positions at the time the erroneous order was passed and not to later positions taken up by them of their own accord as resulting from that order.⁹ Such restoration may be ordered after taking evidence in the matter, if necessary.¹⁰

Where a party has obtained possession or recovered money under an erroneous decree, it will not be a restoration of the status quo ante merely to restore the possession or to return the money recovered. The party deprived of it would have lost the profit of the property or the interest on the money, of which he had been deprived. The Court has therefore been empowered to pass "any orders including orders for the refund of costs and for the payment of interest, damages, compensation and mesne profits" consequential on the variation or reversal of the decree.¹¹

But the restitution claimed must have been properly consequential on the reversal or variation.¹² Thus, where a judgment-debtor, pending appeal by him against the decree sells his property and deposits the decree amount in Court fearing that he may not succeed in the appeal, but the appeal is subsequently allowed, he cannot claim damages caused by the private sale, in restitution, he being under no obligation to pay the amount and the damages claimed also not being consequential on the reversal of the decree.¹³

It has been held that where a judgment-debtor against whom an ex parte decree was passed, chooses to set aside the sale held in execution of the decree by making the necessary deposit under O. 21 R. 89 and afterwards the ex parte decree also is set aside, the judgment-debtor would not be entitled to claim a refund of the amount which he had deposited as the auction-purchaser's compensation. The reason given is that such a deposit is not made by the judgment-debtor directly in connexion with the decree which has been passed against him but is made in order that he may obtain a special privilege which the law provides.¹⁴

21. "So far as may be." — It will not be possible in many cases to restore the exact status quo ante between the parties. Crops, for instance, which have been removed by the respondent pending appeal cannot be restored. In such cases the Court can grant damages representing the value (but only the net value) of the moveable property of which the restitution is claimed.¹

The Court is, in fact, bound to do everything and make every order fairly and properly consequential on the reversal of the original judgment so as to restore the parties to the same position as they were in at the time of the erroneous order.² Where each party is found entitled to restitution from the other, the restitution should, as near as possible, be simultaneous. Thus, where an auction sale is set aside, the judgment-debtor can claim restitution only on payment to the purchaser of the purchase money. In such a case the restoration of the property must be made conditional on the payment back of the purchase money so that the mutual restoration is, as far as possible, simultaneous.³

Where a decree for pre-emption obtained by a plaintiff is reversed in appeal, the plaintiff is entitled to restitution of the money deposited by him and which had been taken by the defendant vendee.⁴ In such a case it cannot be said that because the plaintiff is unsuccessful in the appeal, there could be no question of restitution to him.

22. Mesne profits.—The use of the words 'damages,' 'compensation' and 'mesne profits' indicate that the possession obtained under an erroneous decree subsequently reversed is wrongful possession.⁶ On the reversal of the decree, the judgment-debtor will be not only entitled to the possession of the property taken from him but also to mesne profits during the period he was kept out of possession.⁷ Where, however, the Appellate Court sets aside the decree and remands the case for fresh or further enquiry and the question of nature of the possession of the party who has been in possession

which it must be the object of all Courts to arrive at, will not have been arrived at unless the persons who have had their money improperly taken from them have the money restored to them with interest during the time that the money has been withheld".²

Where no interest is claimed in an application for restitution it will not be allowed.⁴

In granting restitution it is the injury which has been caused to the party who is ultimately successful, that the Court seeks to remedy. The Court is not concerned with the actual benefit which may or may not have been gained by the other party.⁵ Thus, where a defendant against whom a decree was passed deposited into Court certain amount which the decree-holder did not draw out as he was unable to furnish security as ordered by the Court, it was held that the defendant was entitled, on the reversal of the decree, to get back the amount with interest thereon, though the other party did not get any benefit from the money deposited.⁶

24. Refund of compensation money in land acquisition cases.—Where Government deposits money in a land acquisition case and that is taken by a party and on appeal to the High Court the amount payable is reduced, the party must refund the excess amount to the Government with interest in accordance with the principle of restitution.¹

property or money should have been obtained in execution of the decree which was subsequently reversed.¹ The Section would apply even if the possession of the property or money was taken otherwise than in execution provided it was obtained *under colour of, or in consequence of, the decree.*²

Where possession is obtained by the decree-holder independent of, and in opposition, to the decree, this Section does not apply. Thus, where A gets only a decree for injunction against B and then enters into possession with the aid of the police and the decree is subsequently reversed in appeal, B cannot be given restitution by removal of the superstructure erected on the property.³

26. Splitting up claim of restitution. — The principle of constructive res judicata, whether Section 11 Explanation IV or O. 2 R. 2 of the Code is invoked in its aid, cannot be applied to proceedings under this Section.¹ Where therefore a party is entitled by way of restitution to two reliefs, the claiming of one only of such reliefs in an application does not bar a subsequent application for the other relief. Thus, where A is entitled to the restoration of a property and mesne profits, a first application for the restitution of the property does not bar a subsequent application for the *mesne profits.*² The same principle will apply where a party is entitled to restitution of a sum of money and the interest thereon.³

A second application for the same relief as was previously granted is however clearly barred on the principles of *res judicata.*⁴

See also the undermentioned case.⁵

27. Pecuniary jurisdiction of Court in awarding restitution. — See Note 17, ante.

28. Security for restitution. — The Appellate Court has an inherent power to call upon the respondent to furnish security (notwithstanding the decree has been executed) for the due performance of any decree that might be made in appeal.¹

Where a decree-holder, at the time of the withdrawal of money, executes a security bond by which the principal alone is secured, the Court is not deprived

If the application is one in execution, then Section 141 would not apply thereto. Otherwise it would apply and an application under Section 144 dismissed for default may be restored by applying O. 9 R. 9 thereto.⁵

The nature of proceeding becomes important also where the question is whether Article 151 or Article 152 of the Limitation Act applies to such proceedings (see Note 33), and whether the court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal from an order under this Section is to be ad valorem under Schedule I, Article 1 of the Court-fees Act, or under Schedule II, Article 11 thereof. (See Note 32.)

The adjustment of a claim for restitution before it has been ordered by the Court is not the adjustment of a decree.⁷

See also Notes 31, 32 and 33, below.

31. Appeal — Tenability of. — The determination of a question under this Section has been expressly declared to be a decree under Section 2 (2) and is appealable as such under Section 96.¹ But does an adjudication in an application for restitution not falling within Section 144 amount to a decree? There is a difference of opinion on this point. The Calcutta High Court holds that it is a decree under Section 2 (2).² The Patna High Court holds that it is not;³ while Mr. Justice Chapman of the same Court has expressed an obiter dictum in the undermentioned case⁴ that it will amount to a decree. The Nagpur High Court has held that an order for restitution under Section 151 is appealable on the analogy of an order under this Section.⁵ The Madras High Court has held that an order for restitution made as between the parties to the

The decision in order to constitute a determination of a question under this Section and therefore a decree, must have been one on the merits of the application and must not relate to matters incidentally connected with or collateral to the decision of any such question.⁷

An order dismissing an application for restitution on the ground that the applicant had already obtained restitution⁸ or an order holding that the application is not time-barred⁹ are not decisions on the merits and therefore are not decrees which are appealable. But it has been held that the rejection of a prayer for restitution under this Section amounts to a determination of a question under this Section.¹⁰ It has been held by the Rangoon High Court that an order on an application on the original side of the High Court under this Section is not a "judgment" within the meaning of Clause 13 of the Letters Patent of the Rangoon High Court and hence is not appealable.¹¹

32. Court-fee. — The court-fee payable on a memorandum of appeal against an order under Section 144 depends upon the question whether such an application is one for execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of Section 47 of the Code.

Under the Court-fees Act, 1870, the court-fee payable on memorandum of appeal against decrees is ad valorem under Schedule I Article 1 thereof. But under Section 35 of the Act, the Government of India and the Local Governments have directed that the fee payable on appeals from orders under Section 47 of the Code [which are "decrees" under Section 2 (2) of the Code] shall be limited to the amounts chargeable with a fixed fee under Article 11 Schedule II of that Act.¹

If an order under Section 144 is therefore considered to be one under Section 47, then the fee chargeable is that under Article 11 Schedule II of the Court-fees Act. If not, it will be payable as on an appeal from a decree ad valorem under Article 1 of Schedule I of the Act, on the amount dealt with by the order.

There is a conflict of decisions as to whether an order under this Section is to be considered as one under Section 47 for purposes of court-fees. According to the High Courts of Madras,² Nagpur,³ Patna⁴ and Lahore,⁵ such an order is to be treated as falling under Section 47 for purposes of court-fees. But the contrary view has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad,⁶ Calcutta⁷ and Rangoon⁸ according to which an appeal from such an order must be stamped with ad valorem court-fee.

33. Limitation.—There is a great divergence of judicial opinion as to whether Article 181 or Article 182 of the Limitation Act applies to an application for restitution under this Section.

Article 182 applies to an application for the execution of a decree or order of a Civil Court, and Article 181 applies where no limitation is provided elsewhere for such applications.

Under Section 583 of the old Code, an application for restitution under that Section was one in execution of the appellate decree and Article 179 (now Article 182) of the Limitation Act of 1877 was applied.¹ In cases not falling within that Section, the application was not treated as one in execution of any decree and the Article applied was 178 (now 181) of the Limitation Act, 1877.²

Under the present Code, the Madras, Bombay, Patna, Rangoon and Oudh Courts hold that an application for restitution is one in "execution of a decree" within Article 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908.³ Further, Section 6 of that Act would also apply to such cases, and in cases of disability of the applicant, the time would be extended by virtue thereof.⁴

The other High Courts hold that an application for restitution is not a proceeding in "execution of a decree" and that therefore the Article applicable is 181.⁵ The High Courts of Allahabad, Calcutta and Lahore have held that where a decree reversing that of a trial Court is confirmed in second appeal, the period of limitation for an application for restitution begins to run from the date of the lower Appellate Court's decree and not from the date of the decree in second appeal confirming the reversing decree.⁶ The High Court of Allahabad⁷ has, however, held that, where the application for restitution is for recovery of mesne profits, time does not begin to run until possession of the property has been restored to the successful applicant.

An application for restitution on the reversal of the decree of the High Court by the Privy Council is one to "enforce" the decree of the Privy Council and is therefore governed by Article 183 of the Limitation Act.⁸

34. Inherent power of Court to grant restitution.—It has already been seen in Note 2 that this Section does not confer any new rights which a successful party did not possess otherwise under the general law.¹ The jurisdiction to make restitution is inherent in every Court and will be exercised whenever the justice of the case demands it.² Such powers will be exercised, where an

1. A purchases a property in a sale held in execution of a decree and obtains possession thereof. On the application of B, the judgment-debtor, the sale is set aside. B applies for restitution of possession and mesne profits from A. Does the application lie under Section 144? No: for, no decree has been varied or reversed. But the restitution can be granted under Section 151,⁵ on the principle that an erroneous act of the Court should not be allowed to do injury to the suitors.⁶

2. A obtains a decree against B and recovers the money due under the decree by execution. Subsequently it appears to the Court that B was dead at the time of the institution of the suit. The decree is a nullity and the Court, having levied execution while there was legally no decree, has inherent power to rectify the mistake and order restitution.⁷

There is one distinction between the exercise of the powers under S. 144 and the exercise of the Court's inherent jurisdiction. While the Section is mandatory the exercise of the power under Section 151 depends upon the discretion of the Court which will be used only in the interests of justice.⁸

The inherent powers of a Court do not extend to convert an application which has nothing to do with restitution into one for restitution.⁹ Nor does it extend to ordering restitution against a person who is neither a party to nor bound by any order of the appellate or reversing Court.¹⁰

36. Revision.—No revision lies from an order on an application falling under Section 144, for such an order is appealable as a decree under Section 2 (2).¹ Where the Court refuses to order restitution in the exercise of its discretion in a case not falling within Section 144, the order is not open to revision.²

It has been seen in Note 31 that in cases of restitution not falling within Section 144 there is a difference of opinion as to whether the order made amounts to a "decree." Where the order is held not to amount to a decree and no other remedy is open, a revision will lie.³

- (b) for the restitution of any property taken in execution of a decree,² or
- (c) for the payment of any money,³ or for the fulfilment of any condition imposed on any person,⁴ under an order of the Court in any suit or in any proceedings consequent thereon, the decree or order may be executed against him,⁵ to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable,⁶ in the manner herein provided for the execution of decrees, and such person shall, for the purposes of appeal,⁷ be deemed a party within the meaning of section 47 :

Provided that such notice⁸ as the Court in each case thinks sufficient has been given to the surety.

1. Legislative changes. — The present Section has altered the law in the following respects:—

1. The old Section applied only to sureties for the performance of decrees. It did not apply to securities for the fulfilment of a condition imposed by an order of Court. It was also doubtful whether it applied to securities for the performance of appellate decrees and to securities for restitution of property taken in execution of a decree. It did not also apply to securities for payment of money which were not securities for the performance of decrees. The present Section applies to all these kinds of securities.

2. The word "personally" has been newly added in the present Section before the word "liable."

3. The competency of an appeal from an order under this Section is made clearer by the provision as to the surety being deemed a "party" for purposes of appeal.

4. Notice under the present Section need not be in writing.

2. Scope, applicability and object of the Section. — The object of this Section is to provide a summary remedy for the enforcement of the liability of a surety who has given security for any of the purposes enumerated in the Section. But for this Section, the party for whose benefit the security has been given would have to file a separate suit to enforce the security. This Section dispenses with the necessity of a suit and enables him to enforce the security by execution proceedings in the same manner as if the surety was a party to the decree or order in respect of which security has been given.¹ But the procedure provided by the Section applies only to the extent to which the surety has rendered himself personally liable.

2a. Security by person primarily responsible — Applicability of Section. — A surety is one who takes upon himself, and guarantees the performance of, an obligation which rests primarily upon another. The surety's liability is an accessory one. Hence the Section has no application unless the person sought to be proceeded against has taken upon himself the liability of another.¹ The liability need not be that of either the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder but it may be the liability of an officer of the Court.² Thus, this Section applies to the enforcement of the liability of a

2b. Security in favour of the Court — Applicability of the Section. —

The security under this Section is intended to be given to some named officer or other individual and not to be a mere undertaking to the Court. The Court is not a juridical person. It cannot be sued. It cannot take property and as it cannot take property it cannot assign it. Where therefore a security bond is executed in favour of the Court, this Section has no application. But independently of this Section it can be enforced by an order on an application to which the sureties are parties that the properties be sold unless, before a day named, the sureties find the money.⁴

In the undermentioned case⁵ a security bond was executed in favour of a certificate officer under the Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act in respect of a debt due by a certificate debtor to a certificate holder. It was held that the certificate officer who was deemed to be a Court under Section 57 of the Act, could not maintain a suit on the surety bond, and that the certificate holder as the beneficiary under the bond could sue on it.

See also Note 11 infra.

2c. "Has become liable as surety." —

Where A was appointed commissioner to attach certain moveable property and keep it in custody and he after looking after the shop and locks, it was held that the watchmen could not be said to have become liable as sureties and that this Section did not apply.⁶

3. Security for the performance of any decree. —

Old Section 253 used the words "wherever a person has before the passing of a decree in an original suit become liable as a surety," etc. Hence it did not apply to securities given subsequent to the passing of a decree except when the bond expressly stipulated for its enforcement for a party to the suit and so the objection that the surety was not a surety for a party was groundless. But the case does not decide the question whether this Section will not apply unless the surety is a surety for a party to the suit.)

right of making a person, not a party to a pending suit, amenable to the jurisdiction of the Court in execution proceedings and that it therefore could not be applied to proceedings other than suits. See Section 141 Note 7, ante.

Where the judgment-debtor deposited the decree amount into Court and the next friend of the minor decree-holder applied for withdrawing the money and for re-depositing it in the form of Government Promissory Notes, it was held that such an application was a "proceeding consequent on the suit" and that a surety for such re-deposit can be proceeded against under this Section.⁴

7. "The decree or order may be executed against him."— This Section provides for the enforcement of the surety's liability by execution against the surety of the decree or order in connexion with which the security was given. But the Court is not bound to issue execution against the surety. It has a discretion to refuse such execution.¹ If execution is issued the Court cannot declare a forfeiture in favour of the Government but the security money should be paid to the decree-holder.² The decree-holder must apply it towards the satisfaction of his decree and is not entitled to it over and above the decree amount as a solatium for delay brought about in the execution of his decree.³

The mere fact that the applicant for execution mentions the breach of one condition in the security bond as having given him the right to apply for execution does not disentitle the Court from ordering execution if in the course of the proceedings it finds that some other condition has been broken.⁴

The legality of the order for security cannot be questioned by the surety in the execution proceedings against him under this Section.⁵

The Court has no power under the Section to order the refund of moneys deposited as security. But refund can be ordered under Section 151.⁶

8. "To the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable."— The word "personally" has been newly added in the present Section. Under the former Section there was a conflict of opinion as to whether the Section applied to cases where the surety had not undertaken a personal liability but had merely given a charge on his property.¹ Under the present Section it is clear that it applies only where the surety has rendered himself personally liable.² If therefore a security bond were given by the Government on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council, Section 145 would not apply to the case, as the Secretary of State would not be personally liable under the bond.³ For the same reason, where a surety bond does not create a personal liability but merely creates a charge or mortgage on the surety's property, it cannot be enforced by proceedings under this Section.⁴ Where, however, the charge on the surety's property is declared by the decree itself, the liability can be enforced by executing the

- (Per Division Bench— Bond creating both per-

decree and no suit on the mortgage is necessary.⁵ The reason is that in such a case the surety is virtually in the position of a judgment-debtor.⁶

Where the surety makes himself personally liable and, in addition, charges his property, it is only the personal liability that can be enforced under this Section.⁷ The decree-holder may give up the mortgage and enforce the personal liability of the surety by attachment and sale of the property charged.⁸ O. 34 R. 14 does not preclude such a course because there is no decree for the payment of money against the surety in such cases as required by that Rule.⁹ But where the surety has transferred his equity of redemption to another person, his personal liability cannot be enforced by the sale of the mortgaged property, because it no longer belongs to him. In such a case the property can only be brought to sale by a suit on the mortgage.¹⁰

Where a judgment-debtor himself gives his property as security, the property can be sold in execution under Section 47.¹¹

A surety for costs payable by a party to a suit is personally liable for the costs and the mere fact that he deposits a certain amount by way of security does not exclude his personal liability.¹²

The surety's liability is co-extensive with that of the judgment-debtor and he is jointly and severally liable with the judgment-debtor for the decree amount. A decree against the principal can, in fact, be treated as a decree against him.¹³ Hence, the party for whose benefit security has been given is not bound to execute the decree against the judgment-debtor before proceeding against the surety,¹⁴ except where the decree otherwise provides.¹⁵ Within the limits prescribed by the security bond, the

Where a person gives security for production of property in one suit, he cannot be called upon to produce it in another.¹⁴ As regards the liability and discharge of a surety under Section 55 (4), see Note 12 to Section 55, ante, and the undermentioned cases.¹⁵

Section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act requires that a defendant applying to set aside an ex parte decree should furnish security for the performance of the decree. It has been held that the security only applies to the ex parte decree itself in case the application should fail. Hence, where the ex parte decree is set aside the surety is discharged and he is not liable in respect of the decree that may be passed subsequently.¹⁶

A surety for the appearance of judgment-debtor is discharged if the judgment-debtor is in jail for a criminal offence and cannot be produced on the required date.¹⁷ A surety for the appearance of the judgment-debtor if a particular pending proceeding is dismissed, is discharged if on the dismissal of such proceeding the judgment-debtor surrenders himself before the Court.¹⁸ Where a judgment-debtor is released on security, but owing to the default of the decree-holder the execution petition is dismissed and the surety discharged, the liability is not automatically revived by the mere restoration of the execution petition.¹⁹ It has been held in Rangoon²⁰ that where the surety has bound himself to make the judgment-debtor pay the decree amount on a specified date or, in default, to pay it himself, the judgment-debtor's death before the prescribed date does not end the surety's liability. This view has, however, been dissented from in the undermentioned case.²¹ A surety under O. 38 R. 5 (attachment before judgment) is not discharged by the death of the defendant pending the suit where the cause of action survives against the legal representative and the legal representative is brought on the record.²² But where a person who is not the legal representative is brought on the record and a decree is passed against the estate of the deceased, neither the legal representative nor the surety is bound by the decree.²³

The surety's liability being co-extensive with that of the principal debtor, the extinction or diminution of the latter's liability operates as a discharge of the surety to a corresponding extent.²⁴ Conversely, a surety is bound as long as the judgment-debtor is bound. Hence, when the decree is sought to be executed against the surety, no uncertified

payment by the judgment-debtor can be recognized by the executing Court²⁵ [O. 21, R. 2 (3)]. The Sind Court has expressed a contrary view on this point.²⁶

Where the Court varies the terms of the security bond without the surety's consent, the surety is discharged.²⁷ But where the variation is obviously for the benefit of the surety, he is not discharged.²⁸ Similarly, if the Court in whose favour the surety bond is executed is not in the least responsible for the change in the situation of the surety, the surety is not entitled to ask the Court to relieve him of his obligation under the bond on the ground that the decree-holder has arrived at a certain arrangement with the debtor.²⁹

Is the surety discharged by the failure of the creditor to sue the principal debtor within the period of limitation? Yes, according to Allahabad,³⁰ Rangoon³¹ and Nagpur.³² No, according to Bombay,³³ Calcutta³⁴ and Madras.³⁵ The conflict is due to this reason. Under Section 134, Contract Act, any omission of the creditor, the legal consequence of which is the discharge of the principal debtor, operates as a discharge of the surety. Under Section 137 the mere forbearance of the creditor to sue the principal debtor does not discharge the surety. According to the first group of Courts mentioned above, Section 134 is the Section applicable to such cases; while according to second group it is Section 137. In a recent decision of the Allahabad High Court³⁶ it has been held that Section 134 of the Contract Act does not apply to a security bond executed in favour of the Court.

A contract³⁷ between the creditor and principal debtor, by which the creditor promises to give time to,³⁸ or not to sue,³⁹ the principal debtor, discharges the surety.

5 unless the surety assents to such contract.⁴⁰ Is the surety under this Section discharged
a by the creditor entering into a compromise with the principal debtor? The answer to this question depends on the terms of the security bond.⁴¹

Under Sections 142 and 143 of the Contract Act, 1872, a security which the creditor has obtained by misrepresentation or silence as to material circumstances is invalid.⁴² A surety is discharged by the failure of the consideration for his bond.⁴³ Where the surety has not performed his obligation because the decree-holder has expressly dispensed with its performance, the surety is not liable to be proceeded against, under his bond.⁴⁴ Where a surety dies after the accrual of his liability under the bond, the liability can be enforced against his legal representatives to the extent of his estate in their hands.⁴⁵ Where the surety is not otherwise discharged from his liability the Court has no power to make an order for his discharge⁴⁶ except in the case provided for by O. 38 R. 3 (arrest before judgment).⁴⁷ The High Court of Allahabad has, however, held in the undermentioned case⁴⁸ that the Court to which a guarantee is given has power in a proper case to exonerate the surety from all future transactions.

A surety may be precluded by estoppel⁴⁹ or res judicata,⁵⁰ from disputing his liability under the bond.

Where a bond is given to the Court, the liability of the surety cannot be determined by the surety by giving notice as in the case of a continuing guarantee.⁵¹

Where security for the appearance of a judgment-debtor in the course of certain execution proceedings has been given, the termination of such proceedings will not absolve the surety from a liability already incurred by him before such termination.⁵²

9a. Surety, if can recover sum forfeited. — Where a man stands surety for the appearance of another, he should take every precaution to ensure the carrying out of his undertaking and he cannot be allowed on grounds of public policy to recover any sum forfeited under the bond from the principal or from any one else; for, if he is so allowed, it would only tend to render the surety callous and the whole object of demanding the bond would be defeated.¹

10. Form of surety bond. — A surety bond may be in favour of the Court or the decree-holder. No particular form is necessary.¹ To make the Section applicable, it is not necessary that the surety's liability must have accrued upon an application presented to the Court or a security bond filed in the proceedings.² According to the High Court of Madras,³ however, the Section does not apply to surety bonds executed outside Court.

It has been held that a surety bond charging immovable property with a sum exceeding Rs. 100 is compulsorily registrable, and is inadmissible in evidence without registration.⁴

10a. Enforceability of surety bond in execution apart from the Section. — A security can be enforced in execution under the inherent powers of the Court apart from the provisions of this Section.¹

11. Maintainability of separate suit by or against the surety. — As has been seen in Note 63 to Section 9 ante, a regular suit is not barred by the fact that a summary and concurrent remedy is also provided for. It was held under the old Section that the summary remedy under it was additional and not exclusive, and therefore it did not bar a regular suit to enforce the security.¹ The present Section provides that the surety "shall, for the purposes of appeal, be deemed a party within the meaning of Section 47." This does not make the surety a party to the suit for all purposes.² He is a party only for the limited purpose of appeal. Hence, a suit to enforce the security is not barred under the present Section also.³ Similarly, a suit by the surety to negative

his liability is not barred.⁴ But a suit for injunction restraining the executing Court from executing the decree against the surety cannot be maintained.⁵

Until an application is made for execution against the surety he does not become a "party". Hence, he cannot apply to the executing Court for cancellation of his bond.⁶ Nor will the rejection of such application made by him, where he makes one, constitute res judicata.⁷ But when it is sought to enforce the decree against him, he becomes a "party" and his objections therefore have to be determined in the proceedings and he cannot be compelled to file a separate suit to vindicate his objections.⁸ For the same reason, his omission to raise any objection in proceedings against him under this Section will make the decision as to his liability res judicata and he cannot dispute it afterwards.⁹

A surety cannot have a sale set aside by separate suit, where it is vitiated only by irregularities and not for want of jurisdiction.¹⁰

This was also the law under the old Code.³ It has been held by the High Court of Madras that even where Section 145 does not apply, but the surety bond is enforced without recourse to suit in the manner mentioned by the Privy Council in A. I. R. 1919 Privy Council 55 referred to in Note 2b, ante, there is a right of appeal.⁴

But, until an application is filed for execution against a surety under this Section, he is not a *party*⁵ and hence an order discharging him before such application is made is not appealable.⁶

This Section does not apply to an order for refund of security. Such refund can be ordered only under Section 151. Hence no appeal lies from an order for refund of security.⁷

13. Limitation. — The general trend of opinion is that an application for execution against a surety is governed by Article 182 of the Limitation Act, whether the security was given before or after the decree.¹ The Chief Court of Oudh has, however, held that where security is given after decree, the application does not fall within any of the clauses of Article 182 of the Limitation Act and is therefore governed by Article 181 of that Act,² though in a later decision the same Court has proceeded on the footing of the applicability of Article 182 to such cases.³ Even among the High Courts which hold that Article 182 applies, there is a difference of opinion as to whether the application is governed by Explanation I to that Article or clause (5) of that Article. According to the High Courts of Calcutta,⁴ Lahore⁵ and Patna,⁶ where security is given after the passing of the decree, the decree cannot be said to have been "jointly passed" against the judgment-debtor and the surety within the meaning of Explanation 1 to Article 182 and that an application for execution filed against the judgment-debtor alone or the surety alone does not save limitation against the other. The same view has been expressed by the High Courts of Bombay⁷ and Rangoon⁸ even when the security is given in the suit before the passing of the decree. The High Court of Allahabad, while agreeing that the decree passed in such cases is not a joint decree, nevertheless holds that an application against the one will save limitation against the other under clause (5) of Article 182.⁹ The Chief Court of Oudh has also held the same view in the undermentioned case.¹⁰

Where an appeal is preferred against a decree for the performance of which security has been given, limitation for an application to execute the decree against the surety under this Section is three years from the date of the appellate decree under clause (2) of Article 182 of the Limitation Act.¹¹

As to whether a decree-holder who has allowed his remedy against the judgment-debtor to become time-barred is entitled to proceed against the surety, see Note 9 above.

14. Notice to surety. — Notice to the surety is a condition precedent to the validity of the proceedings against him under this Section.¹ The surety may, however,

Nor need it necessarily be given by the Court.⁴ It may be given by the decree-holder.⁵ It may also be given by the Court to which the decree is sent for execution.⁶ It has been held that only one notice is required by this Section and where such notice has been given, a fresh notice is not necessary each time an application for execution is made against the surety.⁷

The mere arrest of the surety does not constitute the execution of the decree but detention in prison does constitute it. (See O. 21 R. 30.) Where notice is given to the surety at the same time as the order for arrest, but before the order for imprisonment (which is really the order for execution) the notice is valid.⁸

3. A files a suit for partition against B, C and D, and pending the suit mortgages his share to X. A thereafter dies leaving his widow. X applies to be impleaded as co-plaintiff or supplemental defendant. The application is not maintainable. The reason is that O. 22 R. 10 which governs such cases is not applicable inasmuch as there is no devolution or assignment absolutely of the plaintiff's interest on X, but only a derivative interest in the subject-matter. Section 146 cannot also be applied because, there is a specific provision governing such cases and a party cannot be allowed to avoid the conditions of such provision by purporting to proceed under the general provision.³

Similarly, O. 21 R. 16 precludes any one who is not a decree-holder or transferee of the decree by assignment in writing or by operation of law from applying to execute the decree. (See Note 4.)

See also the undermentioned decision.⁴

4. Application for execution by or against representatives. — Order 21 Rule 16 makes it clear that besides the decree-holder any person to whom the decree has been transferred by assignment in writing or by operation of law, may execute the decree. Section 146 cannot be read as extending the scope of O. 21 R. 16 as the former is expressly made subject to the other provisions of the Code. Hence, a transferee of property which is the subject-matter of a suit¹ or which is covered by a decree² is not entitled to apply for the execution of a decree in favour of the transferor, although he may be a person "claiming under" the decree-holder within the meaning of this Section.³ Further, such a transferee is not a transferee of the decree within the meaning of O. 21 R. 16.⁴

The expression "transferee" in Order 21 Rule 16 is however not confined to a transferee of the whole decree, but includes a transferee of a portion of the decree and hence such a person can apply to execute the decree.⁵

A decree may be executed against the property in the hands of a transferee thereof pending the suit.⁶

Where a decree-holder dies during the pendency of an execution application, his legal representatives may be substituted in the execution application and be allowed to continue the execution proceedings without a fresh application for execution.⁷ The same principle applies where the execution has to proceed against the legal representatives of a judgment-debtor who dies during the pendency of an execution application.⁸ It has also been held that an application by the legal representative of the decree-holder under O. 21 R. 16, in a pending execution application, is only a continuation of prior proceedings and not a fresh application for the purposes of Section 48 of the Code.⁹ (For fuller discussion, see O. 22 R. 12 Note 1.)

By reason of S. 146 the words 'passed against the same judgment-debtor' in S. 73 cannot be read as 'passed against the same judgment-debtor or the legal representative of the same judgment-debtor'.)

5. Proceeding or application. — An appeal is a “proceeding” contemplated by the Section. Hence a person claiming under a party to the suit may prefer an appeal from the decree in the suit although he was not himself a party to the suit.¹

Applications under O. 21 R. 2,² or under O. 21 R. 94,³ or under O. 21 R. 95 and 98,⁴ or under O. 34 R. 5,⁵ are all examples of applications contemplated by the Section.

As to when a person can be said to “claim under” another, see Note 8 below.

6. Appeal. — See Note 5 above.

7. Application to set aside ex parte decree. — As has been observed in Note 2 above, there was a conflict of decisions under the old Code as to whether the legal representative of a defendant against whom an ex parte decree had been passed, could apply to set it aside. The present Section now makes it clear that such an application is maintainable.¹

8. “Claiming under,” meaning of. — A person “claiming under” a party to a litigation is one who —

- (1) has succeeded to the position of the latter in the litigation,¹ or
- (2) has acquired from him, subsequently to the commencement of the litigation, an interest in its subject-matter.² In this case he can be said to claim under the party only in respect of the rights and interests in property which he has so acquired.³ Further, the person claiming under the original party must be one who by a title derived from or under the party has himself the right to take the proceeding or make the application and not merely one who has a derivative interest in the property (like that of a mortgagee subsequent to suit) which may, in some manner, be affected by the result of the proceeding.⁴

enough if B has acquired from A an interest in the property concerned in the litigation, subsequently to the commencement thereof]:

(4) A sues B to establish his right to certain property. While the suit is pending, B mortgages the property to C. The suit is decreed against B. B does not appeal from the decree. C, as a person claiming under B, may appeal from the decree.⁸ If, in the above case, B had mortgaged the property to C, prior to the institution of the suit, C would not be a person claiming under B. This is shown by the next illustration.

(5) A, a mortgagee of immovable property, sues B, the mortgagor, for the enforcement of the mortgage. Prior to the suit, B has granted to C, a puisne mortgage of the property. C is not made a party to the suit. An ex parte decree is passed against B in the suit. C cannot apply to set aside the ex parte decree as a person claiming under B, because C's interest was not acquired subsequently to the institution of the suit but was acquired before.⁹

(6) A, a member of a Hindu joint family, obtains a preliminary decree for partition of his share of the family property. Then he transfers his rights in the family property to B. B takes no steps to be impleaded in the suit, but after the final decree, applies to execute it as a person claiming under A. B is not entitled to do so.¹⁰ The reason is that B claimed under A only in respect of the preliminary decree which gave A merely an unspecified share in the family property. The right to secure separate possession granted by the final decree did not vest in A himself on the date of the transfer and could not pass to B under the transfer. B cannot therefore be said to "claim under" A in respect of that right which alone would enable him to execute the decree.

(7) A sues B and attaches before judgment, a debt due to B from C. The suit is decreed in A's favour. Upon this, under O. 38 R. 11, A's attachment before judgment ripens into attachment in execution. Then B sues C and obtains a decree on the debt. A does not attach this decree but applies for its execution as a person claiming under B. It was held by Venkatasubba Rao, J., that A was entitled to do so and by Reilly, J., that he was not.¹¹ It is respectfully submitted that the view of Reilly, J., is correct. A was neither the legal representative of B nor the assignee of B's decree. Hence, he had not succeeded to B's position as a decree-holder. Nor can he be said to have acquired any interest in the subject-matter of the suit inasmuch as his attachment cannot be said to create any interest in it; and even if it does, it cannot be said to have been acquired subsequently to the institution of B's suit, because the attachment was complete before B filed his suit. Under O. 21 R. 53 (3), a decree-holder, who attaches another decree of the nature specified in the said Rule, becomes a representative of the holder of the latter decree for the purposes of execution.¹²

(8) Under O. 21 R. 53, where A attaches in execution of his decree against B, a decree obtained by B against C, A becomes the representative of B. But A becomes the representative of B only for the limited purpose of executing the decree against C. B has no right to adjust the attached decree and release C from his liability under the decree.¹³

It has been held that a Hindu co-parcener is not a person 'claiming under' the manager of the joint family against whom a suit is filed.¹⁴

9. Legal representative need not be brought on the record in order to maintain an application under this Section. — To entitle a person to take a proceeding under Section 146 as a person claiming under a party to a litigation, it is not necessary that he should have been brought on the record as such.¹ Again, where A, B, C and D are entitled as persons claiming under E to make an application, and A alone presents the application within limitation, B, C and D being brought on the record subsequently, the presentation of the application by A alone is not invalid in view of this Section though it may be defective and the Court may not proceed with it.²

147. [New.] In all suits to which any person under disability is a party, any consent or agreement, as to any proceeding shall, if given or made with the express leave of the Court by the next friend or guardian for the suit, have the same force and effect as if such person were under no disability and had given such consent or made such agreement.

[R. S. C., Order 16 Rule 21. See Order 32.]

Synopsis

1. Legislative changes.
2. Scope of the Section.
3. "Person under disability."
4. "As to any proceeding."
5. Leave must be express.

1. Legislative changes. — This Section is new. It is based on O. 16 R. 21 of the Rules of the Supreme Court. It has not made any substantive alteration in the law.

2. Scope of the Section. — Order 32 Rule 7 provides that a minor's guardian for suit or next friend shall not enter into any compromise or agreement with reference to the suit without the leave of the Court expressly recorded in the proceedings. The present Section enacts the substantive rule that a minor shall be bound by a compromise entered into by his guardian in the prescribed manner.

3. "Person under disability." — The Section applies to consent or agreement given or made on behalf of a person who is deemed incapable of prosecuting or defending a suit personally, such as a minor or a lunatic. See Order 32 and compare also Contract Act, Section 11.

4. "As to any proceeding." — The Section does not apply to an agreement merely relating to the conduct of a suit, e. g., an agreement that an issue in a suit (not the suit itself) should be determined by the oath of the defendant.¹ See the Indian Oaths Act, Section 11. Such an agreement entered into by a guardian or a next friend prescribed or allowed by the Code, it may be extended by the Court from time to time.¹ There are, however, two important exceptions to this general rule —

(1) Where the Court ceases to have jurisdiction over the matter, after the order granting the period is passed. Thus, where a Court orders a plaint to be returned under O. 7 R. 10 for presentation to the proper Court and in that order a period is fixed within which such presentation is to be made, the period cannot be extended, as, after the order for return, the Court has no jurisdiction over the matter.² Similarly, where the order fixing time finally disposes of the matter and the Court has no longer seisin of the matter, the time fixed cannot be enlarged.³ Thus, where an order provides that a suit dismissed for default should be restored to the file on condition that the plaintiff pays the costs of the opposite party on or before a particular date and directs that in case of default, the application for restoration is to stand dismissed, the time cannot be enlarged under this Section.⁴

(2) Where a period is fixed or granted by a decree.⁵

5. See the next paragraph in the Notes.

The second exception above noted is based upon another general rule which is enacted in O. 20 R. 3, that when once a decree has been signed it shall not afterwards be altered or added to save as provided by Section 152 or on review. Section 148 cannot be allowed to operate so as to nullify this rule and it, therefore, follows that where a period is fixed or granted by a decree it cannot be extended by the Court,⁶ though the decree itself may be varied or reversed by the Appellate Court under O. 41 R. 32 by granting a different period to that fixed by the lower Court.⁷ There has been, however, a conflict of decisions on the point due to the general principle abovementioned not being always kept in view. It was held by the Patna High Court in the undermentioned case⁸ that where time is fixed for payment in a pre-emption decree, it could be extended by the Court. The decision was based simply on S. 148 without any reference to O. 20 R. 3. The correctness of the decision was, however, doubted in a later case⁹ of the same High Court. The High Courts of Madras,¹⁰ Calcutta¹¹ and Rangoon¹² have held that where a decree for specific performance of a contract is passed on condition of a party paying a certain sum by a certain date, the Court could extend the time. The decisions rest their view on the provisions of Section 35(c) of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, and on the view that a decree for specific performance of a contract on certain conditions is in the nature of a preliminary decree, the original Court keeping control over the action and having full powers to make any just and necessary orders therein including extension of the time fixed by the decree. The Patna High Court¹³ and the Oudh Chief Court¹⁴ hold that the time fixed, even in a decree for specific performance, cannot be extended by the Court under Section 148.

The rule that time granted by a decree cannot be extended by the Court has also got an exception and that is furnished by Order 34 Rules 2, 4 and 7 (as amended by Act XXI of 1929) of the Code. Under those provisions the time fixed by a preliminary decree for sale, redemption or foreclosure may, at any time, before the passing of the final decree, be extended by the Court from time to time. For another exception to the rule, see Note 3 below.

Where a plaintiff in whose favour a conditional decree is passed, neither fulfils the condition within the time allowed nor applies for extension of time, he cannot execute the decree.¹⁵

3. Extension of time fixed by consent decree. — Another exception to the rule that time fixed by a decree cannot be extended by the Court under Section 148 is furnished by consent decrees. It has been held in the undermentioned cases¹ that a Court can extend the time fixed in a consent decree for the doing of an act directed thereby, where time is not of the essence of the contract of compromise. The reason is that a consent decree cannot have greater validity than the compromise on which it is based, and hence, the Court can, in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction, grant such relief against forfeiture as it might have granted if there had been no consent decree and a suit had been instituted to enforce the compromise. The Allahabad,² Lahore³ and Patna⁴ High Courts and the Oudh Chief Court⁵ have held that the general rule holds good even in the case of consent decrees and that, therefore, the time fixed by the decree could not be extended.

As to the power of the Court to extend the time fixed for payment of the mortgage money under a compromise decree in a suit to enforce or redeem a mortgage, see Notes to Order 34 Rules 2, 4 and 7.

4. Extension of time fixed by award. — A valid award is final and conclusive as between the parties to it and a Court cannot interfere with any portion of it. Hence, the Court cannot extend the time fixed by an award.¹ It may also be noted that time fixed by an award is not time fixed by a Court and hence Section 148 does not apply to it. (See Note 1 above.)

5. "Act prescribed or allowed by this Code." — The Section applies only where time is fixed for doing an act prescribed or allowed by the Code.¹ Where a period is fixed by the Court to do a particular act under its inherent powers, it is an act allowed by Section 151 of this Code and therefore this Section will apply to such a case.² "Code" includes not only the body of the Code but also the Schedules and the Rules made under Section 122 or Section 125 [see Section 2 (18)]. See, for instance, the following provisions :—

- (1) Section 55 (4). — Security for the production of the judgment-debtor within the time fixed by Court.³

4. ('09) 32 Mad 305 (311) (FB).

The Section does not apply when time is fixed for doing an act not prescribed or allowed by the Code.⁵

But in so far as the provisions of the Code are made applicable to proceedings under any other Act, the Section applies to steps to be taken under such Act. Thus, according to the High Courts of Madras, Lahore and Nagpur, an Insolvency Court can extend the time fixed for applying for discharge, even after the time originally fixed has expired,⁶ though the High Courts of Rangoon and Patna have taken a contrary view.⁷ Further, even without recourse to Section 148 it may be possible to construe a particular Section in such a way as to admit of an extension of the time fixed by the Court. Thus, it was held under the former Code that a Court could extend the time fixed for security for costs of appeal under S. 549 (now O. 41 R. 10),⁸ or for paying deficit court-fee under Section 54 (now O. 7 R. 11).⁹ On similar reasoning, it has been held that a Court can extend the time fixed for payment of deficit court-fee under the Court-fees Act, Section 10 clause (2)¹⁰ or Section 11,¹¹ or for deposit of one-fifth of the purchase-money in a suit for pre-emption under Section 22 (4) of the Punjab Pro-emption Act.¹² Paragraph 8 of Schedule II expressly confers on the Court the power to extend the time fixed for making an award, even after the expiry of the period originally fixed.¹³ Hence, there is no necessity for resort to Section 148 for extension of time in such a case.

See also the undermentioned case.¹⁴

6. Discretion of Court. — The power to enlarge time under this Section is discretionary.¹ The Appellate Court should not interfere with the discretion of a Court under Section 148 except on very strong grounds.² A Court passing orders for extension of time should be taken, on the record as it stands, to have exercised its discretion as prosecution,⁹ or is withdrawn,¹⁰ or summarily dismissed under O. 41 R. 11,¹¹ there is no decree of the Appellate Court in which the lower Court's decree may be said to have merged, and hence the period fixed does not get a fresh start from the decree of the Appellate Court.

Where a decree awarding future mesne profits is confirmed in appeal, the three years' period under O. 20 R. 12 runs from the appellate decree.¹² The reason is that the term "decree" in O. 20 R. 12 refers to the executable decree in a case, and where an appeal is preferred against a decree, the only executable decree is that of the Appellate Court, whether it affirms, reverses or modifies the lower Court's decree. See also Note 5 to O. 34 R. 3, infra.

10. Court to which application for extension should be made. — Where an appeal has been preferred from a decree, the only Court that can extend the time fixed by it, assuming that the case is one in which time can be extended, is the Appellate Court.¹ A fortiori the lower Court has no jurisdiction to extend the time fixed in an appellate decree.² But it has been held by the Rangoon High Court that where an appeal has been dismissed, the trial Court has power to enlarge the time fixed by the order appealed from.³ See also the undermentioned case.⁴

11. Appeal. — No appeal lies from an order under this Section as it is neither a decree nor an appealable order under Section 104.¹

After a final decree, the Court cannot extend the time fixed by it under S. 148. Hence, if the Court does extend the time it should be deemed to be acting not under Section 148 but under Section 47, and its order is therefore appealable as a decree.²

12. Revision. — An order under this Section is not appealable but is open to revision provided the conditions of Section 115 are satisfied.¹ See Note 11 above. But

1. Legislative changes. — This Section corresponds to Section 582A introduced into the old Code by Act IV of 1892. The material changes in the present Section are the following —

- (1) Section 582A applied only to appeals and applications for review. The present Section applies to all documents chargeable with court-fees. See Note 4.
- (2) The insufficiency of the stamp must under Section 582A have been caused by mistake on the part of the appellant or applicant for review as to the amount of the requisite stamp. There is no such restriction in the present Section. See Note 5.

2. Scope of the Section. — It is provided under the Court-fees Act, 1870, Sections 4 and 5, that no document chargeable with court-fee under that Act shall be filed, or recorded in any Court of Justice, unless the court-fee payable in respect thereof is paid. 5. "Discretion of Court." — There are certain cases in which the Court is bound to give some time for making up the deficient court-fee. Thus under O. 7 R. 11 (c) where a plaint is insufficiently stamped, the Court is bound to grant some time to supply the deficient court-fee.¹ In all other cases the Court has a discretion under the Section to allow the court-fee to be paid at any stage. The High Courts of Calcutta,² Lahore³ and Patna⁴ and the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court⁵ have held that this discretion cannot be exercised in favour of a party who has not been bona fide, that is, who is not under any honest mistake or doubt or who has not made an honest attempt to comply with the law. Mere poverty or ignorance is not a ground for indulgence under the Section.⁶ The reason is that where an appeal is not filed in time with a proper court-fee, the appeal becomes barred and the respondent gets a valuable right. The Court should not, therefore, exercise its discretion under this Section to his prejudice except where sufficient grounds exist for the non-payment of the full court-fee in the first instance. The Bombay High Court⁷ has, on the other hand, held that the discretion is not limited to cases where the party is under a bona fide misunderstanding of the law as to valuation. This view is based on the fact that the present Section omits the provision which occurred in Section 582A of the old Code restricting the exercise of discretion to cases where the insufficiency of the stamp is caused by mistake on the part of the appellant or applicant. It has been held in a recent Full Bench decision of the Lahore High Court that the discretion conferred on the Court by this Section is normally expected to be exercised in favour of the litigant except in cases of contumacy or positive mala fides or reasons of a similar kind.⁸ The Peshawar Judicial Commissioner's Court⁹ also has held that where the failure to pay the requisite court-fee is due to a bona fide mistake, the Court can allow the deficiency to be made up under this Section.

Where a party has been contesting with some show of justification the correctness of the order requiring him to pay an enhanced court-fee, he should be allowed reasonable time in which to pay the deficiency on an adverse order being finally passed against him.¹⁰

6. Whole or any part of any fee. — The discretion under Section 149 applies not only where the court-fee paid is not sufficient but also where no court-fee has been paid at all.¹ It has been held by the Madras High Court that Section 149 contemplates cases in which payment of duty is insufficient ab initio. Hence, it does not apply where a plaintiff is allowed to sue on the basis of a tentative valuation, as in suits for accounts or mesne profits, and, on a decree for a higher amount being passed, is required under Court-fees Act, Section 11, to pay additional court-fees.² It is however open to a Court on the construction of the Court-fees Act, Section 11, itself to enlarge the period fixed for payment of additional court-fee under that Section.³

7. "At any stage." — Under the former Code it was held by the High Courts of Bombay,¹ Calcutta² and Madras,³ the Chief Courts of the Punjab⁴ and Lower Burma,⁵ that where the deficiency in court-fee is supplied after the period of limitation but within the time allowed by the Court, the suit or appeal was not barred by limitation. The reason given was that the suit or appeal should be deemed to be instituted on the date of the original presentation of the plaint or memorandum of appeal and not on the date on which the deficit court-fee was made up. The Allahabad High Court did not accept this view.⁶ According to that Court, the presentation of an insufficiently stamped plaint or memorandum of appeal was not a valid presentation, and the suit or appeal could be deemed to be instituted only when the full court-fee was paid. But, as has been seen in Note 1 above, in the case of appeals and applications for review a different rule was provided by Section 582A which was introduced into the Code by Act IV of 1892.⁷ The Section superseded the undermentioned decisions which held that a Court could not allow deficient court-fee on an appeal⁸ or an application for review⁹ to be made good after the expiry of limitation unless the memorandum of appeal or application for review had been received through the mistake of the Court or of an officer thereof. The principle embodied in the Section was extended to plaints in the Full Bench case of Hari Ram v. Akbar Hussain.¹⁰ The learned Judges in that case relied upon Section 28 of the Court-fees Act which enables deficit court-fees to be made up where insufficiently stamped documents have been received or filed through mistake or inadvertence. Their Lordships interpreted the expression "mistake or inadvertence" in Section 28 so as to include the mistake not only of the Court or its officers but also of the party. The present Section gives legislative effect to this view and enables a defective document to be retrospectively validated at any stage if the insufficiency of the stamp is subsequently made up within the time allowed by the Court.¹¹

POWER TO MAKE UP DEFICIENCY OF COURT-FEES

The Court can also enlarge the time even after the lapse of the period originally by it.¹² (See Section 148.)

Deficit court-fees on a plaint may be allowed to be made good even in appeal.¹³ it is desirable that in such cases the matter is disposed of at the earliest possible moment after the deficit is discovered.¹⁴

As to the power of a Court to extend time for payment of court-fees fixed by own decree, see Note 2 to Section 148.

Where no time is fixed in the decree for the payment of the court-fee which is payable under it, the executing Court can allow time for such payment.¹⁵ Where a decree is passed on condition that a certain court-fee is deposited and the decree-holder deposits the same after three years and the Court accepts it, it cannot be said that execution is barred by limitation inasmuch as the decree is complete only when the court-fee is deposited and limitation cannot begin to run under Article 182 of the Limitation Act until there is a decree capable of execution.¹⁶

of deficit court-fee to leave open the question of limitation.³ But where a Judge refuses to allow a party to make up deficient court-fee under this Section, there must be something to show that he did exercise his discretion in the matter.⁴ In a recent Special Bench decision of the Patna High Court⁵ it has been held that where the lower Court has exercised its discretion under this Section in an outrageous fashion, the aggrieved party must immediately move the High Court in revision and if he does not do so, he cannot afterwards impeach the order of the Court in the appeal from the final decision. (It may, however, be noted that there is a conflict of decisions as to the power of the High Court to interfere in revision with interlocutory orders: see Section 115 Note 5.)

9. Complaints and memoranda of appeals. — A person is not entitled, as a matter of right, to make up deficient court-fee under this Section. It is entirely left to the discretion of the Court to allow him to do so or not. But in a case of a plaint insufficiently stamped, the Court is bound under O. 7 R. 11 to allow some time to make up the deficiency, provided the plaint has been presented within the period of limitation.¹ Does the same rule apply to appeals? On this point there is a conflict of decisions. See Note 6 to O. 7 R. 11 for a full discussion of the subject.

10. Application for leave to sue or appeal as pauper. — (1) Where an application for leave to sue or appeal as a pauper is rejected, can the Court allow the court-fees to be paid under the present Section so as to treat the suit or appeal as filed on the date of the filing of the pauper application and not on the date on which the court-fee is paid?

(2) Has the Court power to convert an application for leave to sue or appeal as a pauper into a suit or appeal and by allowing time for the payment of court-fees on such suit or appeal under this Section treat the same as filed on the date on which the application for leave was made?

For a discussion of these questions, see Notes to O. 33 R. 7 and O. 44 R. 1.

11. Conversion of proceedings. — When an application is made under Section 95 of the Code, the Court may allow it to be converted into a suit on payment of the requisite court-fee. In such a case, the suit will be deemed to be instituted when the application was made and not when the court-fee is paid.¹

150. [New.] Save as otherwise provided, where the business of any Court is transferred to any other Court, the Court to which the business is so transferred shall have the same powers and shall perform the same duties as those respectively conferred and imposed by or under this Code upon the Court from which the business was so transferred.

Synopsis

1. "Save as otherwise provided."
2. "Where the business of any Court is transferred to any other Court."
3. Abolition of Court.
4. Powers and duties of Court to which business is transferred.

1. "Save as otherwise provided." — The mere fact that the Court by which a certain power is to be exercised, is specified does not preclude any Court to which the business of the former Court is "transferred," from exercising the power under Section 150, unless it is expressly or impliedly provided that no Court other than the one specified can exercise the power. The following are some of the cases bearing upon this question —

Execution proceedings. — Section 38 provides that a decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it, or by the Court to which it is sent for execution. Section 37 defines what a "Court which passed the decree" includes. A decree is passed by a Court A. The business of Court A is transferred to Court B within the meaning of Section 150. But Court B does not come within any of the categories mentioned in Sections 37 and 38. Nevertheless Court B can execute the decree passed by Court A. The reason is that there is no express or implied exclusion of the competency of any Court not mentioned in Sections 37 and 38 to execute the decree.¹ As to whether a particular area concerned in a suit is transferred to another Court, see Note 5 to Section 37 and also Note 2 below.

Application to set aside ex parte decree. — Order 9 Rule 13 provides that an application to set aside an ex parte decree may be made to the Court by which the decree was passed. This does not mean that no other Court can set aside the ex parte decree. Hence, a Court to which the business of another Court is transferred under Section 150 can set aside the ex parte decree passed by the latter Court.²

Power to punish for disobedience of temporary injunction. — O. 39 R. 2 (2) empowers the "Court granting an injunction" to punish persons for disobeying the

3. ('39) 69 Cal L Jour 379 (380). (If without an application for review, a Court sets aside its own previous order rejecting a plaint for non-payment of deficit court-fees and gives a further extension of time under S. 149, C. P. C., its subsequent order is not a nullity but remains a perfectly good order until it is set aside by a superior Court or in proper proceedings.)

as transfer of all the business, pending or otherwise, in that area to the transferee Court.⁵ Some of them also hold that the Court in which the suit or proceeding was instituted would at the same time continue to have jurisdiction thereon.⁶ This is an impossible position. As has been seen already, where a business is transferred from Court A to Court B, Court A has no longer that business before it and has no power to deal with it. If, on the other hand, Court A continues to have power over a particular business it cannot be said to have been transferred from it to another Court. For all the above reasons the decisions taking the second of the two views set forth above are not correct and have been overruled by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in the undermentioned case.⁷ The Allahabad High Court has held in the undermentioned case⁸ that the Section cannot be invoked in a case where there has only been a transfer of jurisdiction as to future business subject to an express reservation as regards pending cases. Thus, a Court in which a suit was pending at the time of the transfer has exclusive jurisdiction to entertain an application for restitution arising out of such a suit.

There is a conflict of decisions as to whether an assignment of business by the District Judge under the Civil Courts Act is a transfer of business within the meaning of Section 150. The Calcutta⁹ and Patna¹⁰ High Courts hold that it is not. The High Court of Madras¹¹ has, on the other hand, held dissenting from the Calcutta decision, that the word "transfer" is not inapplicable to a case where the District Judge fixes the jurisdiction of the Court under the Civil Courts Act, and transfers the whole of the business within the area to it.

3. Abolition of Court. — Where a Court is abolished, its proceedings can be continued by the Court which would have jurisdiction to entertain the suit if it was instituted at the time when the proceedings are sought to be continued.¹ (See Section 37 of the Code.) If a new Court is established in the place with the same jurisdiction as the old one, it can continue the proceedings² unless they have been transferred to some ('36) 163 Ind Cas 622 (623) (Cal). (S. 150 refers to the change of the territorial limits of a Court's jurisdiction by notification or by special order and not to a mere distribution of work among Courts exercising the same jurisdiction—Hence where a temporary injunction in a suit filed in the Court of the Central Munsif is granted by that Court, and subsequently in the usual course of practice, the suit is allocated to the Court of the third Munsif, the latter Court has no jurisdiction to punish for breach of the injunction, as that is not "the Court granting the injunction," within the meaning of O. 39 R. 2 (3), C. P. C.—The Central Munsif's Court alone has jurisdiction to deal with the breach.)] question and to reserve another for investigation, the Privy Council pointing out that it did not require any provision of the Code to authorise a Judge to do what in this matter was justice and for the advantage of the parties; to remand a suit in a case to which neither Section 562 nor Section 566 (1882) applies; to stay the drawing up of the Court's own orders or to suspend their operation, if the necessities of justice so require: to stay, apart from the question whether the case falls within Section 545, the carrying out of a preliminary order pending appeal; to stay proceedings in a lower Court pending appeal and to appoint temporary guardian of a minor upon such stay; to apply the principles of res judicata to cases not falling within Sections 13 and 14 of the Code (1882) and so forth."

In Nandkishore v. Ramgolam,¹¹ further instances were added, viz.—

"Punishing for contempt of Court committed when the Court is not sitting: deciding questions of jurisdiction though the Court is ultimately found not to have jurisdiction over the suit: directing a party who has applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council to pay costs on the dismissal of his application: amending decrees or orders: granting restitution in cases of reversal of execution sales and orders in execution proceedings: restraining by injunction a person from proceeding with a suit in the Small Cause Court: staying proceedings pursuant to its own order in view of an intended appeal; and treating an application for revision as an appeal and vice versa."

The Court has an inherent power under such circumstances to act according to justice, equity and good conscience¹² especially in India, where every Court is a Court of Equity as well as of Law.¹³

This Section does not confer any new powers on the Courts but only saves their inherent powers to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court.¹⁴ The object of enacting the Section is to show that the powers expressly conferred by the Code apply only so far as they go, but cannot restrict the scope of the Court's inherent powers to do complete and substantial justice¹⁵ for the administration of which alone Courts exist.¹⁶

The inherent powers of the Court being very wide and indefinable¹⁷ the limits of such jurisdiction should be carefully guarded and its exercise in an arbitrary and capricious manner effectively prevented.¹⁸ It has been seen that the inherent power of a Court is recognized only to meet those cases for which no provision is made by the Code. It follows, therefore, that where there are express provisions of law applicable to a particular case, there is no inherent power in the Court to override them.¹⁹ The words "nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect" do not mean that the Code stands repealed where a Court decides to exercise its inherent powers, for the inherent powers can be exercised only where there is no express provision of the Code.²⁰ Another limitation on the exercise of such power by the Court is that it must be consistent with sound general principles of law, and with the intention of the Legislature.²¹

The inherent powers of a Court under Section 151 can be exercised, as the Section itself indicates, only —

(1) for the ends of justice, or

(2) to prevent the abuse of the process of the Court.²²

2. Court cannot override express provisions of law. — It has been seen in Note 1 above that the inherent power of a Court exists only where there is no express provision of law applicable to the case.¹ Thus, where there is a specific prohibition of a power of a Court to hear an appeal or to review a previous judgment exists only if it is given by statute and therefore when there is no such right given by statute, a Court cannot, under its inherent powers, hear an appeal or review its previous order⁵ or transfer a case.⁶ [But the Court has always power to rectify its own mistakes and where a previous order has been passed under a mistake the Court can rectify such mistake. See Note 6 infra.] Similarly, the High Court has no inherent power of revision over proceedings in subordinate Courts, because the power of revision is a creature of the statute and does not exist if it is not provided for by statute.⁷

4. Ends of justice. — The inherent powers saved by the Section are to be used only to secure the ends of justice or to prevent the abuse of process of the Court.¹ The following broad rules may be taken as a guide to determine what constitute the “ends of justice” :

(1) *It is in the ends of justice that an injury should be remedied and needless expense and inconvenience to parties avoided.*² Thus, a Court will remedy an obvious

O. 9 R. 9 by the heir of the plaintiff the suit was restored. On revision the Judicial Commissioner reversed the order of restoration on the ground that the original dismissal was rightly made on default. On appeal to the Privy Council, Lord Shaw, after stating that the rules and orders applicable to a defaulter could not be applied to a dead man and quoting the words of Section 151, observed "in their Lordships' opinion such abuse has occurred by the course adopted in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. Quite apart from Section 151 any Court might have rightly considered itself to possess an inherent power to rectify the mistake which had been inadvertently made. But Section 151 could never be invoked in a case clearer than the present." It follows from this ruling that where a Court employed a procedure in doing something which it never intended to do and there is miscarriage of justice, there is an abuse of the process of the Court.² The injustice so done must be remedied on the principle actus curiæ neminem gravabit—an act of the Court shall prejudice no person.³ Such an abuse by the Court may arise *either (a) by the default or mistake of the Court itself*⁴

But no act done or proceeding taken as of right and in due course of law, is an abuse of the process of the Court simply because such act or proceeding is likely to embarrass another.¹⁸ A person who brings himself within the terms of a statute is not to be deprived of a right conferred by that statute on "so treacherous a ground of decision as an abuse of the process of the Court."¹⁹ Nor is the failure to conform to a mere rule of practice, an abuse of process in every case; the Court must find in each case what exactly the abuse is.²⁰ It has been held in the undermentioned case²¹ that the expression "abuse of the process" refers only to some process of the Court such as a writ of attachment, taken maliciously to the injury of another. It is submitted that this view is too narrow and is not in accord with the general trend of judicial decisions referred to above.

7. Criminal cases. — Where a Court issues notice to a party to show cause why he should not be proceeded against under Section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, for producing a forged receipt, and the question of forgery is before the High Court on appeal from the proceeding wherein the document was held to be a forgery, the High Court has inherent power to stay the proceedings under Section 476 pending disposal of the appeal.¹ See also the undermentioned cases.²

7a. Contempt of Court, proceedings for. — The High Court as a Superior Court of Record has an inherent power to punish for contempt of Court and that power is not affected in any way by the Codes of Civil or Criminal Procedure.¹ The High Court can also enforce its orders but does not possess the power to arrest for contempt a person outside its general jurisdiction.² It has been held that the High Court has jurisdiction to award costs in a criminal prosecution for contempt of Court and has inherent jurisdiction to order its recovery on the lines on which decrees are executed by the Civil Court.³

8. Insolvency Court. — As has already been observed in Note 1, every Court will, in the absence of express provision in respect of any matter, be deemed to possess, as inherent in its very constitution, all such powers as are necessary to do the right and undo a wrong in the course of the administration of justice.¹ An Insolvency Court has, therefore, inherent powers to pass just and necessary orders in cases not provided for by the Insolvency Act.² This is made clear by Section 5 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, read with Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. An Insolvency Court has thus power to grant ad interim protection before adjudication³ or to rectify mistakes in its proceedings,⁴ or to set aside an ex parte order obtained by fraud or misrepresentation.⁵ It has, however, no power to stay an execution sale going on in another Court⁶ though the latter Court may, on a claim by the Official Receiver under Section 51 or Section 52 of the Insolvency Act, stay the execution under its inherent powers.⁷

See also Note 8b below.

8b. Legal Practitioners Act, cases under. — It has been held that although there is no express provision for a review of an order made under the Legal Practitioners Act, the High Court has inherent power to restore a pleader whose name has been struck off the rolls.¹

9. Appeal. — An order under Section 151 is not an appealable order under Section 104 and no appeal, therefore, lies as an appeal from an order.¹ But if such an order amounts to a decree within the definition of Section 2 sub-section (2), an appeal will lie under Section 96.² Thus an order of remand under Section 151 which amounts to an adjudication under Section 2 (2) is appealable as a decree under Section 96.³ Where an order is made in execution under Section 151 and such order falls within Section 47, an appeal and a second appeal will lie therefrom.⁴ An order under Section 151 can also be challenged under Section 105 if it affects the decision of the case on the merits but not otherwise.⁵

1. Legislative changes.—The third paragraph of Section 206 of the old Code ran as follows —

"If the decree is found to be at variance with the judgment, or if any clerical or arithmetical error be found in the decree, the Court shall, of its own motion or on that of any of the parties, amend the decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment or to correct such error: provided that reasonable notice has been given to the parties or their pleaders of the proposed amendment."

The present Section differs from the above provision in the following respects —

- (1) It does not provide for amendment where the decree is found to be at variance with the judgment. An application to amend the decree, so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment, should, under the present Code, be made to the Court in the exercise of its inherent power which is saved by Section 151.
- (2) The provision as to errors arising from any accidental slip or omission is new. Section 206 of the former Code referred only to clerical or arithmetical errors and errors due to discrepancy between the judgment and decree.
- (3) The present Section has omitted the proviso as to notice being given of the proposed amendment.

2. Amendment of judgments, decrees or orders. — It will be seen from O. 20 R. 3 that a judgment, once signed, cannot be afterwards altered or added to, save as otherwise provided by Section 152 or on review.¹ O. 20 R. 6 provides that the decree shall be drawn up so as to agree with the judgment. Reading this Section with O. 20 Rules 3 and 6, it is clear that as a general rule, a judgment, decree or final order, once drawn up and signed, cannot subsequently be altered, varied or amended in any manner even with the consent of the parties.² The only exceptions to the general rule are the following —

- (1) Under Section 152 a clerical or arithmetical mistake or an error arising from an accidental slip or omission may be corrected by the Court,³ even though the decree is in conformity with the judgment.⁴

- (2) Under the inherent powers of the Court (Section 151) a decree which is at variance with the judgment can be amended so as to agree with the judgment.⁵
- (3) A decree or order may be varied or amended in any other case by a review of judgment or by an appeal from the decree.⁶

Without correcting the decree itself, the Court may, under O. 20 R. 11, order that the payment under a money decree may be made in instalments. A decree if made ex parte may also be set aside by a proceeding under O. 9 R. 13 or a suit in certain circumstances, or in appeal or revision.

Where the Court can amend a decree passed by it, the proper course is to apply for amendment and not to appeal.⁷ But neglect to apply for amendment does not preclude a party from obtaining the same result in appeal.⁸ But an amendment should not be made if it will have the effect of making the decree differ from the judgment. If the same mistakes are made in both the judgment and decree, both should be amended and not the decree alone.⁹

A decree may be amended though the applicant's pleader may have signed the decree.¹⁰

As to the powers of the Court to extend the time fixed by a decree, there is a conflict of opinion. See Section 148, Notes 2 and 3.

In an application to amend a decree or order under this Section, the Court has no power to annul the decree or order itself.¹¹

See also Notes to Order 20 Rule 6.

3. Clerical or arithmetical mistakes and errors arising from accidental slip or omission. — As has been seen in Note 2 above, a Court can always correct clerical or arithmetical mistakes and errors arising from accidental slip or omission even though the decree agrees with the judgment. Thus, where a direction as to costs,¹ or interest,² or leave to bring a fresh suit,³ or a provision fixing the period for payment in a redemption decree,⁴ or a relief asked by the plaintiff,⁵ is inadvertently omitted, the decree may be amended by adding the direction or provision.

2 The following are some instances of accidental slips that may be corrected by the Court under this Section —

- (1) Inadvertently passing a decree for foreclosure instead of one for sale.⁶
- (2) Inadvertently recording an order of dismissal, instead of an order decreeing the suit or appeal.⁷
- (3) Inadvertently misdescribing the property covered by the decree or judgment.³
- (4) Judgment accidentally including the property of a stranger.⁹
- (5) Passing a personal decree against the legal representatives of a party.¹⁰
- (6) Accidentally entering the name of a deceased party instead of his legal representatives who had been brought on the record.¹¹
- (7) Passing an erroneous order as to costs by oversight.¹²

See also the undermentioned cases.¹³

Where by an oversight or accidental slip the name of a wrong person is inserted in the decree as the guardian of a minor party, the Patna High Court has held that the mistake may be corrected under this Section.¹⁴ But where it is not a case of mere misdescription but a case of real non-representation of the minors by the proper guardian, it is a defect of substance and hence the Madras High Court has held¹⁵ that such a defect cannot be cured by substituting the name of the proper guardian under this Section.

Section 152 does not apply where there is no question of clerical or arithmetical mistakes or errors arising from accidental slips and omissions,¹⁶ even though the order correcting what is really a mistake of its ministerial officers by whom the decree or order was drawn up. In In Re Swire, Mellor v. Swire,³ Lindley, L. J., said:

"There is no such magic in passing and entering an order as to deprive the Court of jurisdiction to make its own records true, and if an order, as passed and entered does not express the real order of the Court,"

the Court has ample jurisdiction to set that right. And Bowen, L. J., said:

"Every Court has inherent power over its own records so long as those records are within its power and it can set right any mistake in them. It seems to me that it would be perfectly sneaking if the Court could not rectify an error which is really the error of its own minister. An order, as it seems to me, even when passed and entered, may be amended by the Court as to carry out the intention and express the meaning of the Court at the time when the order was made, provided the amendment be made without injustice, or on terms which preclude injustice."

Thus, where P sues Q and R for a certain sum and judgment is given in favour of P 'as prayed' but the decree as drawn up makes the amount payable by Q alone, the Court can amend the decree so as to bring it in conformity with the judgment.⁴ Similarly, where the judgment gives a mortgage decree in favour of the plaintiff but the decree is wrongly drafted so as to give the decree-holder only a charge on the property, the decree may be amended so as to agree with the judgment.⁵

Where an order which had been dictated but which had been intended to be reconsidered was signed inadvertently, the High Court of Allahabad set aside the order under its inherent powers.⁶

But where the decree as drafted is in accordance with the intention of the judgment and there is no clerical or arithmetical mistake or accidental slip or omission, the Court has no power, either under Section 152 or under its inherent jurisdiction, to amend it⁷ and this is so even if the judgment itself is erroneous in law⁸ and the error is apparent on the face of the judgment.⁹ Thus, where a judgment is passed against G and the decree agrees with the judgment, it cannot be amended so as to convert it into a decree against G and another person.¹⁰

7. "May be corrected." — The amendment of accidental mistakes under this Section cannot be claimed by any party as of right. The matter is left to the discretion of the Court to be exercised in view of the peculiar facts of each case.¹ But the Calcutta High Court has, in the undermentioned case,² held that the word "may" in Section 152 does not make it discretionary with the Court to order the correction but merely enlarges the powers of the Court by providing that such correction can be done at any time. It was, however, conceded in that case that the amendment may be refused when it offended against the principles of equity, for instance, where the interest of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice may be jeopardised. In a later case of the same High Court,³ Suhrawardy, J., adhered to the view taken in the case and further held that where the decree was not in conformity with the judgment owing to an error of the Court, it was incumbent on the Court to order its amendment without regard to any laches on the part of the parties. Graham, J., on the other hand, held that the matter is one of discretion to be exercised in view of the particular facts of each case. In a still later case,⁴ the same High Court held that a decree could be brought into conformity with the judgment even after the lapse of years and that the only limitation is that the Court may deem it inexpedient or inequitable to exercise its power where third parties have acquired rights bona fide, under the erroneous decree.

8. "At any time." — It is a general principle that rules of limitation are applicable to acts to be performed by litigants and not to acts which the Court may or has to perform suo motu.¹ An amendment under this Section falls within the latter class of acts and there is consequently no limitation for an application for amendment under this Section.² The amendment can be made at any time.³ But where satisfaction of a decree has been entered up the Court is functus officio and has no power to amend the decree. An order for amendment in such a case is a mere

Similarly, where third parties have acquired rights under the erroneous decree, for valuable consideration and in ignorance of the error in the decree, no amendment should be allowed so as to prejudice their rights.⁵ The reason is that it would be inequitable to allow amendment of the decree in such a case.⁶ Laches may also, in the particular circumstances of a case, disentitle a party to relief by way of amendment of a decree.⁷

9. Court by which amendment can be made. — Unless and until a decree is superseded in appeal or revision, the Court which passed it is entitled to amend it under this Section.¹ Where an appeal or revision has been preferred from the decree, the power of the Court of first instance to amend the decree depends on the question whether the decree has been superseded by the appellate decree or is left intact. Where the decree of the lower Court is confirmed, reversed or varied, it is superseded by the decree of the Appellate Court, and the only Court that can amend the decree thereafter is the Appellate Court.² But where the decree of the lower Court is left intact, as for instance, where an appeal or revision is dismissed in limine,² or for default,⁴ or where the amendment relates to a portion of the decree which is outside the scope of the appeal⁷ or where the appeal is withdrawn,² the lower Court is entitled to amend the decree. It was held by the High Court of Allahabad in the undermentioned case⁷ that the words "at any time" have a special significance and provide for amendment by the lower Court even where its decree has merged in the decree of the Appellate Court.

There is a conflict of opinion as to the effect of a dismissal of an appeal under O. 41 R. 11 of the Code and as to whether after such dismissal the decree can be amended by the lower Court or can be amended only by the Appellate Court. For a discussion of the question, see Notes to O. 41 R. 11, infra.

Amendment pending appeal against decree.—From what has been said above, it is clear that an amendment can be made by the Court which passed the decree even when an appeal against the decree is pending in a superior Court.⁵ But the Appellate Court can also amend the lower Court's decree under Section 152 read with Section 107 (2) of the Code.⁹

4 apply for a review of the order.²

It has been held that where a plaintiff applies for the amendment of a decree on the ground that by an accidental slip he mentioned in his plaint the name of a wrong person as the defendant which name has been repeated in the decree, and asking that the decree should be amended by the insertion of the name of the right person, it is open to the Court to amend the decree as prayed for after giving notice to the person whose name is sought to be inserted as that of the defendant and giving him an opportunity to show that the mistake is not accidental or clerical.³

13. Effect of amendment. — An amended decree must be taken as in force from the date of the original decree. There is a distinction between a case of amendment and one of revision or substitution. When an instrument is amended so as to express the real intention which it was intended to express but which it did not completely express, the transaction is not in substance varied but its inaccurate description is only rectified.⁴ Hence, where a decree is amended the amended decree operates as res judicata from the date of the original decree and not from that of the amendment.⁵ But it has been held by the Oudh Chief Court that though the general rule is that an amendment of a decree dates back to the date of the decree, yet the amendment should not be allowed to take effect from the date of the decree so as to affect the rights of a purchaser for value without notice who has acquired the property after the decree but before the making of the amendment.⁶

14. Amendment and limitation. — An amendment of the decree under this Section does not give a fresh starting point of limitation for an appeal or application except an application for the execution of the decree.⁷ Where, however, a party is prejudiced by an amendment but finds that at the date of the amendment, an appeal from the decree is barred if the period is calculated from the original decree, the Court will excuse the delay under Section 5 of the Limitation Act.⁸ Again, where a decree is in conformity with the judgment and the Court has no power to amend the decree under this Section, a party affected by the amendment will be entitled to calculate the time from the date of amendment.³ In the undermentioned case,⁴ the Punjab Chief Court expressed an opinion that the defendants were not bound to appeal from the decree at a time when the plaintiff had, within the period of ninety days allowed for an appeal, applied for an amendment of the decree. No reasons are given for this proposition and the decision, it is submitted, cannot be accepted as correct.

Limitation for the execution of decree.—Article 182 clause (4) of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908) expressly provides that where the decree has been amended, time for execution of it runs from the date of amendment. The following decisions to the contrary, passed under the Limitation Act of 1877, which did not contain such a provision, are no longer good law.⁵ The undermentioned cases⁶ decided under the same Act, in which it was held that the limitation was extended, by treating the order for amendment as one for review of judgment, are only of academic interest at the present time in view of the express provision in Article 182 clause (4).

See also the Authors' Commentaries on the Limitation Act, Article 182 Note 50.

15. Successive applications for amendment—Res judicata.—An application for amendment of a decree is not a suit. Hence, Section 11 of the Code does not apply to such an application. But the principle of res judicata applies to it, Section 11 not being exhaustive. (See Notes under Section 11.) Hence, where an application for amendment has been disposed of on the merits, a subsequent application substantially for the same relief is barred.¹ But where the subsequent application is materially different from the previous application it is not barred.²

16. Consent decree.—A clerical or arithmetical mistake or an error due to an accidental slip or omission in a consent decree, may, as in the case of any other decree, be corrected by the Court under Section 152.¹ Similarly, where a consent decree is not in accordance with the agreement of the parties the Court has power under Section 151 to bring it into conformity with the agreement.² But where there is no such mistake and there is no variance between the decree and the compromise petition, it cannot be amended either under Section 152 or Section 151, on the ground that the compromise itself is bad for mutual mistake or fraud of the parties or on the ground that it does not represent the true intention of the parties.³ In such a case, the remedy of the aggrieved party is to sue for setting aside the decree on the ground of mistake

As to the maintainability of suits to set aside or correct a consent decree on the ground of mutual mistake of the parties, see Note 16 above.

19. Appeal. — An order granting or refusing an amendment under this Section is not a decree¹ or an appealable order, and consequently, no appeal lies therefrom.² Where, however, there is no clerical or arithmetical mistake or accidental slip or omission, but the whole method of calculation is altered by the amendment, the order, though purporting to be one under Section 152, must be deemed to be one passed on review under Order 47 and hence will be appealable.³

An order of the High Court rejecting an application to amend a decree passed by it on appeal, is not an order made "on appeal" within the meaning of Clause 39 of the Letters Patent (Calcutta), and is not appealable to the Privy Council under that Clause.⁴ As to whether an order of a single Judge of the High Court on an application for amendment is appealable under Clause 15 of the Letters Patent as a "judgment," see Note 6 to Section 104.

The amended decree is always appealable as a decree.⁵ But, as has been seen in Note 14 above, in the case of an amendment under Section 152, no fresh starting point of limitation for appeal is given by the amendment, though the delay may be excused in appropriate cases under Section 5 of the Limitation Act.

Where the Judge instead of amending the decree passes a fresh decree, there is a right of appeal from the amended decree,⁶ but not from the original decree.⁷

20. Revision. — An order granting or refusing an application for amendment under the Section is, as has been observed already in Note 19 above, neither a decree nor an appealable order. Hence, it is open to revision by the High Court in a fit case.¹

1. Legislative changes. — This Section is new. It is based on O. 38 R. 13 of the Rules of the Supreme Court (of England).

2. Scope of the Section. — Section 152 deals with amendments of judgments, decrees and orders. O. 6 R. 17 deals with amendments of pleadings. The present Section confers a general power on the Court to amend any defect or error in any proceeding in a suit and to make all necessary amendments for the purpose of determining the real questions between the parties. The object of the rule allowing amendments is to minimise litigation and avoid multiplicity of proceedings,¹ and also to see that the merest technicality may not be allowed to stand in the way of substantial justice.² Hence, the Court has power to allow all necessary amendments for raising the real questions at issue between the parties provided that no injury or injustice is caused to the opposite party and are such as can be sufficiently compensated for by costs or otherwise.³ But the Court will not aid a party by allowing him to amend his pleading where the mistake was fraudulent or intended to get round a previous decision of the Court.⁴

The power to get an amendment of a proceeding under this Section, is subject to the discretion of the Court, and is not claimable as of right.⁵ As to the general principles guiding the exercise of discretion in granting or refusing an amendment, see Order 6 Rule 17.

3. "At any time." — The power of amendment conferred by this Section can be exercised "at any time" during the proceedings.¹ The power is vested both in the original as well as in the Appellate Court.² But prima facie it is limited to amendments during the actual pendency of proceedings and not after the decree has been drawn up and sealed.³

4. "Defect or error." — Assuming that Section 153 applies to orders of Courts, an order erroneous on the merits is not "a defect or error" in the proceedings within the meaning of the Section, and cannot be amended or corrected under this Section.¹

5. "Any proceeding in a suit." — The term "proceeding" in this Section must be interpreted as including any application to a Court of justice however made, for aid in the enforcement of rights, for reliefs, for redress of injuries, for damages or for any remedial object.¹ See for instance the following —

(i) Pleadings. — See Order 6 Rule 17.

(ii) Memorandum of appeal. — A memorandum of appeal may be amended under this Section.² Thus, when, through a bona fide error, the name of a deceased person instead of that of his legal representative appears in a memorandum of appeal as the respondent, the error may be amended.³ But, it has been held that no such discretion to amend is available to the Court when it is sought to substitute a person for the potential appellant who died before the memorandum of appeal was filed, the reason being that in such a case there is no memorandum of appeal at all in the eye of the law.⁴

(iii) Application for execution. — See Notes to Order 21 Rule 17.

(iv) Application for final decree in a mortgage suit. — The Section applies to the amendment of an application for a final decree in a mortgage suit.⁵

(v) Application for personal decree under O. 34 R. 6. — Under Section 153 an application for a personal decree against the mortgager under O. 34 R. 6 may be amended by allowing a party to sign it, where he has failed to do so in the first instance,⁶ or by allowing the addition of an alternative prayer.⁷

(vii) Answers to interrogatories. — Leave may be given in a fit case to amend answers to interrogatories. Thus, an answer containing an admission made by mistake may be amended.⁹ Similarly, an answer may be amended where subsequent to the filing of the affidavit of answer, it is found that there are other matters which could have been included in it.¹⁰

(xi) Sale certificate. — The present Section prima facie applies to pending proceedings.¹⁶ Section 152 applies to the amendment of decrees and orders. Although a sale certificate is a document issued by a Court, it is doubtful whether it is an order of Court within Section 152. It may also be doubted whether it is a proceeding in a suit within the meaning of the present Section. A Court has, however, inherent power to amend a sale certificate after notice to the judgment-debtor, where the certificate does not correctly describe the property sold,¹⁷ unless the sale price has been affected by such misdescription.¹⁸

See also the undermentioned cases.¹⁹

6. Amendment by Court suo motu. — Under O. 6 R. 17 the Court has no power to amend the pleadings of its own accord. Under the present Section the Court has a power of amendment suo motu. But even under this Section the Court has no power to convert, of its own accord, a suit for declaration into one for possession.¹ The reason is that a Court is bound to adjudicate on a claim as brought and cannot direct parties to alter their claims.²

Synopsis

1. "Any present right of appeal."
2. Right of appeal being given by new Code but not by old Code — Effect on pending proceedings.
3. Other rights accrued before the present Code.
4. Power of Appellate Court.

1. "Any present right of appeal."—It has been observed in Note 3 to the Preamble that the general principle is that an Act which takes away a substantive right is not retrospective in effect except by express enactment or by necessary implication. This principle is recognized in Section 6 of the General Clauses Act of 1897. But this principle does not apply to enactments merely affecting practice or procedure. For, there can be no vested right in any course of procedure. But a right of appeal is a substantive right and not a mere matter of procedure. When the law permits an appeal, the right of appeal vests in a party on the commencement of proceedings in the lower Court. Any Act coming into force subsequently cannot affect this right prejudicially, except by express words or by necessary implications.¹ This is the general rule apart from Section 154. Under this Section the question has arisen whether this general right is restricted by the words "any present right of appeal" in the Section. The question has arisen in this way. Take, for instance, an order which was appealable under the former Code, but is not appealable under the present Code. The present Code came into force on 1st January 1909. Suppose the proceedings in which the order was passed were commenced before 1st January 1909, and also that the order was passed before 1st January 1909. In such a case, there was undoubtedly a present right of appeal accrued to a party at the commencement of the Code (1st January 1909) because the order having already been passed, the right of appeal given by the former Code was capable of being exercised immediately on that date. But suppose, in the above instance, the proceedings were started before 1st January 1909, but the order therein was passed after 1st January 1909. In such a case, no doubt a right of appeal had accrued to the party at the commencement of the present Code, because when the law permits an appeal, the right of appeal vests in a party on the initiation of the proceedings in the lower Court. But as the order had not been passed at the commencement of the Code but was passed only subsequently, the right of appeal was not therefore capable of being immediately exercised at that date. Is such a right, a present right of appeal within Section 154? On this question there is a conflict of decisions. It has been held by the Calcutta High Court,² the Punjab Chief Court³ and the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court⁴ that such a right of appeal cannot be called a present right of appeal because although it has vested in a party, it is not capable of being immediately exercised. But the Madras High Court

This Section and the Fifth Schedule of the Code have been repealed by Act XVII of 1914, Section 3.

The Section as it stood before the repeal was as follows :—

"The enactments mentioned in the Fifth Schedule are hereby repealed to the extent specified in the fourth column thereof."

157. [S. 3, second sentence.] Notifications published, declarations and rules made, places appointed, agreements filed, scales prescribed, forms framed, appointments made and powers conferred under Act VIII of 1859 or under any Code of Civil Procedure or any Act amending the same or under any other enactment hereby repealed shall, so far as they are consistent with this Code, have the same force and effect as if they had been respectively published, made, appointed, filed, prescribed, framed and conferred under this Code and by the authority empowered thereby in such behalf.

Synopsis

1. "Rules."
2. "Consistent with the Code."
3. Retrospective effect of the Code. See Note 3 to Preamble.

1. "Rules." — The expression "rules made" means rules properly and validly made, in other words, made with jurisdiction by the proper authority. Rules, which though purporting to be made under the old Code, were beyond the powers given by the old Code, do not become valid by reason of the fact that, if they had been made under the new Code, they would be valid.¹

2. "Consistent with the Code." — The word 'Code' according to the definition in Section 2 clause 1 includes the rules in the First Schedule. Hence, it has been held that the Madras Civil Rules of Practice made by the High Court under the Code of 1882 but not re-enacted and published in accordance with the procedure prescribed in Part X of the Code of 1908 are invalid if and in so far as they are inconsistent with any of the rules in the First Schedule of the later Code.¹

3. Retrospective effect of the Code. — See Note 3 to Preamble.

[S. 3, para. 2.] In every enactment or notification passed or issued before the commencement of this Code in which reference is made to or to any Chapter or section of Act VIII of 1859 or any Code of Civil Procedure or any Act amending the same or any other enactment hereby repealed, such reference shall, so far as may be practicable, be taken to be made to this Code or to its corresponding Part, Order, section or rule.

A. I. R. COMMENTARIES JUDICIALLY NOTICED

A. I. R. 1933 Peshawar 61 at 62.

"The law on the subject is lucidly summed up in Chitaley's Commentary on Civil Procedure Code, Vol. 1, p. 182, and is stated as follows: 'A party them.'"

A. I. R. 1934 Allahabad 253 at 255.

" the reason being that no one can have vested right in forms of procedure. The subject is discussed in Chitaley's Civil Procedure Code, Vol. 1, pp. 4 and 5."

A. I. R. 1934 Peshawar 40 at 42.

"The argument is based on Chitaley's Commentary, 1933 Edition, p. 1888 under O. 21, R. 15 of the Code, which is supported by Gopendra Krishna v. Moti Lal, A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 559."

A. I. R. 1934 Peshawar 57 at 61.

"These conflicting views are noted on pp. 746 and 747 of Chitaley's Civil Procedure Code."

A. I. R. 1934 Peshawar 94 at 95.

"He (D. J.) quotes from Chitaley as follows: 'All co-promisees as parties.'"

"I have no disagreement with this statement of the law, but in the present case the defendant is not a promisee, but a promisor. A further passage from Chitaley is cited by the learned Additional District Judge to the following effect :

'Where several of suits.'

"That statement of law applies to the facts of the present case."

A. I. R. 1936 Allahabad 811 at 813.

"The ruling cases on this point are collected and noted in Chitaley's Civil Procedure Code, Vol. 3, p. 2318, 2nd Edn."

A. I. R. 1936 Nagpur 228 at 230 =

I. L. R. 1937 Nag. 230 at 234.

"The point is well summed up at pages 2469 and 2470 of Chitaley and Rao's Code of Criminal Procedure, Vol. 3, and the learned authors rightly point out that the view of the High Courts, excepting Rangoon, is consistent with the principles underlying sub-section 3 of the section."

A. I. R. 1936 Peshawar 37 at 37.

"Counsel for the appellants quotes from Chitaley's Commentary to the effect that where the question of costs has been referred to the arbitrator, or where the whole matter in dispute has been referred to the arbitrator, the arbitrator has authority to award costs in the award."

A. I. R. 1936 Peshawar 209 at 210.

A. I. R. 1937 Allahabad 82 at 87.

"The balance of authority seems to be that an Appellate Court has no power under it to interfere to the prejudice of a person who was a party to a suit, but who was not impleaded in the appeal: vide "Code of Civil Procedure," Chitaley & Annaji Rao, Vol. 3, pp. 3003-3004 (1st Edn). I am, therefore, of opinion that defendants 2-7 ought not to have been impleaded."

A. I. R. 1937 Calcutta 222 at 224.

"On this point there is a considerable mass of case law which will be found set out in Chitaley's Commentary on the Civil Procedure Code."

A. I. R. 1937 Lahore 41 at 49 =

I. L. R. 1937 Lah. 11 at 33.

"I find it stated in Chitaley and Annaji Rao's Code of Civil Procedure that this section (i. e., S. 80) like S. 79 enacts only a rule of procedure. With this view I agree."

I. L. R. 1937 Nag. 277 at 284.

"This question has been well discussed in Note 10 under S. 162, p. 804, of Chitaley and Annaji Rao's recent Commentary on the Criminal Procedure Code. The learned authors favour the view of the Madras and Calcutta High Courts which is in accordance with the opinion expressed

I. L. R. 1938 Nag. 280 at 282.

"In Chitaley and Rao's Civil Procedure Code, Edn. 2, p. 2094 under O. 22, R. 1, it is remarked :

'If, in the first Court, the
..... either party.'

"I agree with these remarks which would apply to a dismissal of the suit in appeal. It is further remarked on the authority of 34 Mad loc. cit. that the appeal cannot be continued even in respect of costs or other relief which are merely incidental to the main reliefs. I accordingly uphold the contention of the respondent."

I. L. R. 1937 Nag. 519 at 520.

A. I. R. 1937 Oudh 481 at 483 =

I. L. R. 13 Luck. 560 at 565 & 566.

"Messrs. Chitaley and Annaji Rao in their Commentary on the Code express the opinion that the present cl. (d) of R. 5 of O. 33 gives effect to the view taken in the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in 7 All 661, and other cases."

A. I. R. 1937 Peshawar 13 at 15.

"In this connexion we may quote the following Note No. 4 from Mr. Chitaley's Commentary under R. 53 which is as follows: 'Other decrees. — A decree this rule.'"

A. I. R. 1937 Peshawar 41 at 41.

"On p. 1480 of Mr. Chitaley's Commentary on the Civil Procedure Code (Edn. 1) it is noted that 'where a plaint is presented on the re-opening date after court-holidays and the period of limitation has expired during the holidays, the fact that the ground of exemption under S. 4, Limitation Act, was not specifically mentioned in the plaint will not entail the dismissal of the suit inasmuch as the Court is bound to take judicial notice of the holidays.' This note is supported by reference to rulings in Nagpur, Lahore, Madras and Calcutta Courts, though a Calcutta ruling to contrary is also noted. The proposition as stated appears to me to be correct."

A. I. R. 1937 Peshawar 81 at 81.

"Learned counsel has been unable to show me any decided case in which action of that nature amounts to a public nuisance, and the commentary in Chitaley's Civil Procedure Code certainly indicates the contrary."

A. I. R. 1937 Rangoon 391 at 392.

"The learned authors of the Code of Criminal Procedure by Chitaley and Annaji-rao, Edn. 1, Vol. 1, at p. 200 say : 'Thus an ... Proviso.'

"I agree with this view."

A. I. R. 1938 Calcutta 287 at 289 & 290 =

I. L. R. (1938) 1 Cal. 53 at 58 and 60.

"In the Note to Messrs. Chitaley and Annaji Rao's Code of Civil Procedure, at p. 1388, I find the following comment : 'The first parties.'

"The learned authors of Chitaley and Annaji Rao's Code of Civil Procedure in the paragraph to which I have already referred, appear to me to sum up in a few words the substance of the decisions."

I. L. R. (1939) 1 Cal. 112 at 120.

A. I. R. 1938 Lahore 220 at 222.

"(The amended Rule will be found printed at pp. 252-3 of Chitaley's Code of Civil Procedure, Edn. 2.)"

A. I. R. 1938 Lahore 345 at 346.

"The learned counsel for the present respondents also quoted A. I. R. 1932 All. 446, A. I. R. 1933 All. 264 (a judgment by a Full Bench, one member of which was the present Hon'ble Chief Justice of the Lahore High Court) and the remarks in the Commentary of Mr. Chitaley's Criminal Procedure Code, Vol. 1, p. 676."

A. I. R. 1938 Nagpur 122 at 123.

"It was assumed by the Taxing Judge (Bose J.) in his order of reference that the present case was similar because he assumed that there was no difference for these purposes between a plaint and a memorandum of appeal. This we think is wrong although there are a larger number of rulings collected at p. 44 of Vol. 1 of Chitaley's Civil Procedure Code which take that view."

A. I. R. 1938 Oudh 45 at 47 and 48 =
I. L. R. 13 Luck. 689 at 693 and 695.

"The learned counsel (for appellant) maintained that that case stands alone, and he has pointed out to us that in the Commentary on the Civil Procedure Code by Chitaley and Annaji Rao this case is submitted to have been wrongly decided: vide the Commentary, Vol. 1, (Edn. 2) p. 478, (Note 9, F. "The general result of this conflict has been clearly set out in Note No. 9 of the commentary on that Rule in Chitaley's Code

A. I. R. 1940 Peshawar 24 at 25.

"At Note 10 to O. 21, R. 15 of Chitaley's Civil Procedure Code the following comments are made as regards the right of appeal against an order made under O. 21, R. 15:

'The question whether of the non-applicant decree-holder.'" erroneously thinks that it has, or that it has no jurisdiction to act in a particular manner or to pass a particular order, there is either an illegal assumption of jurisdiction or a failure to exercise the jurisdiction which it has. But suppose the order of the trial Court as to its own jurisdiction is appealed against and the Appellate Court either confirms such order or reverses it, can the lower Appellate Court itself be said to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it or to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction which it has or to have exercised its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity? According to the High Courts of Allahabad,¹ Bombay,² Calcutta,³ Madras⁴ and Patna⁵ and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur,⁶ the decision of the Appellate Court is reversible under Section 115. There is a difference of opinion in the Lahore High Court⁷ and the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court.⁸ The High Courts of Allahabad and Lahore and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur have also held that the order of the Court of the first instance can itself be revised notwithstanding that it was appealed against.⁹

where the interference is likely to work not in the interest of justice but rather against it, the High Court will not interfere.⁶ Where, however, a particular order creates an anomalous position or leaves the matter in a muddle,⁸ the High Court will set it aside in revision. Thus, while a Small Cause Judge returned a plaint which had been returned by the Munsif to be presented before the former and the Munsif adhered to his previous order, the High Court is entitled to make such an order as would enable the plaintiff to have his action tried.⁹ But a party who, by his conduct creates a particular position, cannot, in revision, seek to set it aside.¹⁰

17. Laches in making the application.—Applications in revision are not governed by any law of limitation.³ Revision is a purely discretionary remedy. It is a privilege and not a right and corresponds to the remedies in England known as certiorari and mandamus. The invariable rule in all these cases is that the party aggrieved must come to the Court at the earliest possible moment. When, therefore, there has been a great and unexplained delay or laches in making the application, the Court will refuse to interfere.² Where, however, the petitioner is not to be blamed for the delay³ or where there are exceptional circumstances⁴ the High Court will not refuse to exercise its powers under the Section. Thus, when the petitioner failed in his attempt to set aside an ex parte decree and then filed a suit to vacate the same for want of jurisdiction but the Court held that the relief could not be granted, and then a revision was preferred to the High Court, the circumstances were held sufficient to explain the delay in applying for revision.⁵ The practice of the High Court of Patna is to entertain applications in revision only if they are filed within three months of the date of the order sought to be revised.⁶

21. Orders under Sections 152 and 153.—The High Courts of Allahabad, Bombay⁷ and Calcutta⁸ and the Chief Court of the Punjab⁹ have held that an order passed under Section 206 of the old Code constitutes an adjudication separate from that concluded by the decree and amounts to a decision of a 'case' capable of being revised. The same view has been taken under the present Code also.⁵ Accordingly, it has been held that if a Court refuses to amend a decree in conformity with the judgment it amounts to a refusal to exercise jurisdiction.⁶ In an old Allahabad case⁷ when the decree was amended from "I dismiss the appeal" to "I accept the appeal" it was considered to be a grave irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction. Similarly, a Court has no power to vary or amend a decree when it is in conformity with the judgment and, if done, it will be open to revision.⁸

way of a suit is available to the aggrieved party under clause (2) of Section 73.¹ This, however, does not mean that the aggrieved party should be confined to that remedy "if the circumstances of the case warrant an interference." Accordingly when Courts have acted in defiance of the terms of Section 73 and thereby assumed a jurisdiction which they did not possess or declined jurisdiction in a proper case, the High Court will interfere to set matters right.²

See Notes to Section 73 also.

23. Orders in claim cases.

As has been seen in Note 8 ante, no application will ordinarily be entertained to revise an order passed under O. 21 Rr. 60, 61 or 62 inasmuch as the party against whom the order is made has a special remedy by way of a suit. But this does not bar the High Court's power of interference in exceptional cases.¹ Thus, if the lower Court fails to determine the only real question that has to be decided, namely, that of possession² and disposes of the petition on a determination of the question of title³ which it was not competent to investigate, or allows a claim in express violation of the Code, as for example, after the execution sale⁴ or against mortgaged property which was brought for sale,⁵ the High Court will interfere.

enough; it will be violating the principle of the rule if the sale is set aside without such an application.¹² though an oral application has been considered sufficient.¹³ No order could be made setting aside a sale under O. 21 R. 89, without notice as provided under R. 92, but there is no jurisdiction to confirm the sale for failure to pay process fees when the auction-purchaser appears in the proceeding by a pleader.¹⁴ When the deposit falls short, due to a mistake of the Court, and is subsequently made good, the Courts act with material irregularity in refusing to set aside a sale.¹⁵ No application for revision will lie from an order dismissing an application under R. 89 on the ground that an application under Rule 90 was previously dismissed.¹⁶ See also the undermentioned cases.¹⁷

As in the case of applications under O. 21 R. 89 so in applications under R. 90, only a first appeal is provided by Section 104 and O. 43 R. 1 clause (i).¹⁸ But if the application raises a question concerning the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of Section 47 and when no petition is put in under R. 89, the executing Court is bound to decide it and the decision so given being a decree, a second appeal will lie.¹⁹ An instance of the kind is to be found where a sale is held without issuing a proper notice provided by O. 21 R. 22.²⁰ When a Court rejects an application to set aside a sale summarily²¹ or without allowing the petitioner an opportunity to substantiate his allegations²² or without considering the evidence let in by him²³ or by misapplying the law of limitation,²⁴ it was held to be a sufficient ground for interference. refusing an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis is a case decided.¹¹ The Nagpur and Sind Judicial Commissioners Courts have maintained the distinction pointed out by the Allahabad Court though interference would be made only in cases where there is some material illegality or irregularity in the procedure adopted by the lower Court in rejecting the application.¹² In Oudh¹³ the application in forma pauperis was itself held to be a "case decided" and therefore if the lower Court committed an irregularity in deciding it, it could be revised whether the application was allowed or rejected. This view, it is submitted, is the correct view, and has been upheld by all the other High Courts. The Madras, Patna and Rangoon High Courts¹⁴ have also rejected the distinction referred to above between the rejection and the allowing of the application. Accordingly when the lower Court, after considering the whole question of pauperism and in the exercise of discretion comes to a proper decision it will not be interfered with when there is no error of jurisdiction.¹⁵ If, on the other hand, the lower Court commits an irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction as where it declines to give notice to the Government Pleader or to the defendant before disposing of the application,¹⁶ or where it does not properly consider the

27. Orders under Order 47.—An order rejecting an application for review on the merits is not open to revision¹ unless the Court has erroneously thought that it has no jurisdiction to deal with the application² or has declined to hold a proper inquiry³ or has rejected it under the erroneous view that the court-fee paid is not sufficient.⁴ The High Court will also set aside an appellate order setting aside an order granting review if the Appellate Court had entertained the appeal on the grounds other than those mentioned in O. 47 R. 7.⁵ An order granting review is revisable under this Section when the order is one without jurisdiction⁶ or has been made in the exercise of jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.⁷ But the High Court should not interfere in revision against an order granting a review simply because the Judge did not say that the additional evidence is important.⁸ Where the order granting review was substantially just and passed in the exercise of discretion, it is not a case for interference.⁹ See also the undermentioned case.¹⁰

27a. Orders under Order 45.—This Section is applicable to an order passed granting or refusing a certificate under Order 45.¹

27b. Decision as to court-fee, whether revisable.—It has been held that an order demanding additional court-fee is revisable under this Section as in such cases.

30. Sanction to prosecute.—Prior to 1902, the Allahabad¹ and Madras High particulars of charges as in a case for perjury, and forgery⁵ or to consider a case on its merits⁶ constituted a material irregularity. Similarly, where sanction is given on facts which do not establish any offence⁷ or on evidence legally inadmissible,⁸ the order is reversible.

But though the applications in all such cases lie on the civil revisional side of the High Court and not on the criminal revisional side, the Chief Justice could, under Section 108 of the Government of India Act of 1915, direct a Bench exercising criminal jurisdiction to deal with the case.⁹ The procedure prescribed would however be one under the Civil Procedure Code.¹⁰

When action under Section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, is taken by a subordinate Criminal Court, the High Court may revise the proceedings under Section 439, Criminal Procedure Code.¹¹

Having regard to the view that revision against an order granting sanction to prosecute is under Section 115, it is competent to the Court to award costs of the petition.¹² Some recent cases of the Calcutta High Court have taken the view that Section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, creates a special jurisdiction and provides in clause 6 the machinery for the correction of possible errors committed by the primary Court and consequently the party who seeks relief must have recourse only to such machinery and cannot invoke the aid of this Section.¹³ In a recent Full Bench decision¹⁴ the Bombay High Court has held, agreeing with the undermentioned decision of the Lahore High Court,¹⁵ that an application in revision from an order under Section 476B of the Criminal Procedure Code by a Civil Court to the High Court should be heard and decided by the High Court in accordance with the provisions of Section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

only in the year 1919. Before that, the decisions were not uniform as the original Clause allowed an appeal to the High Court from the judgment of a single Judge or of one Judge of a Division Bench in pursuance of Section 13 of the Charter Act. By Section 13 the High Courts are empowered to exercise original and appellate jurisdiction. The question then arose whether revisional jurisdiction was a part of the appellate jurisdiction vested by Section 13 of the High Courts Act. If it did include it, then an appeal was held to lie from an order of a single Judge made under this Section, provided it amounted to a "judgment." The Allahabad² and Bombay³ High Courts took the view that an order refusing to send for the records of a case did not amount to a judgment, as Clause 15 of the Letters Patent referred only to judgments passed in civil original suits and to orders passed by a single Judge disposing of original and appellate work. Obviously it was thought that "appellate" powers did not include revisional jurisdiction. The Madras High Court⁴ interpreted the words "appellate jurisdiction" referred to in Section 13 of the Charter Act as exhaustive and so inclusive of revisional powers. Consequently an appeal was held to lie from a judgment of a single Judge under this Section. The rejection of a petition⁵ under this Section was held not to amount to a "judgment" as the Court does not enter into the controversy between the parties, but only declines to interfere.⁶ But later cases of the High Court of Madras took the view that even if the single Judge declined to interfere in revision his order amounted to a "judgment" and was hence held to be appealable.⁷ As has been noticed before, under the present Letters Patent no such appeal lies. There can be no review or re-hearing of an application for revision dismissed for default.⁸ The proper course is to prefer a second application for revision.⁹ An application for review may also be treated as one for revision.¹⁰

PART IX.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO THE CHARTERED HIGH COURTS

116. [S. 631.] This Part applies only to High Courts which are, or may hereafter be, constituted by His Majesty by Letters Patent.

Part to apply only to certain High Courts.

3. Substituted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, for "established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915."

1. Amendment after 1908. — See foot-note (a) to the text of the Section.

117. [S. 632.] Save as provided in this Part or in Part X or in rules, the provisions of this Code shall apply to such High Courts.

1. Scope of the Section. — This Section declares that the provisions of the Code shall apply to Chartered High Courts also save as otherwise provided in Parts IX and X of the Code or in rules.¹ Thus, Sections 16, 17, and 20 of the Code are declared by Section 120 in this Part (IX) to be inapplicable to the High Court in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction. Again, under Section 129 of the Code, the High Court can make rules as to its own procedure in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction and such rules will prevail over the provisions of the Code.² For rules not applicable to Chartered High Courts, see O. 49 R. 3. See also Notes to Section 114.

2. Rules include forms. — "Rules" means rules and forms contained in the First Schedule or made under Section 122 or Section 125. See Section 2 (18), ante.

3. Security for costs in Letters Patent Appeals. — It follows from what has been said in Note 1 above that O. 41 R. 10 will apply to Letters Patent appeals

also unless the High Court has, under Section 129, made a rule inconsistent with it.¹ The Bombay High Court has framed such a rule (being Rule 725 of the Bombay High Court Rules) and therefore O. 41 R. 10 has been held not to apply to Letters Patent appeals in the Bombay High Court.²

4. Review in Letters Patent Appeals. — It has been seen in Note 1 to Section 114 that there is a difference of opinion among the several High Courts in India on the maintainability of an application for review of decrees in appeals under the Letters Patent. In cases where such review lies, appeals from orders passed on such applications for review are governed by the provisions of Order 47 Rule 7.¹

5. Letters Patent Appeals. — See Section 104, Note 6 and Notes on Clause 15 of the Letters Patent (Madras, Bombay and Calcutta).

118. [S. 634.] Where any such High Court considers it necessary that a decree passed in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction should be executed before the amount of the costs incurred in the suit can be ascertained by taxation, the Court may order that the decree shall be executed forthwith, except as to so much thereof as relates to the costs ;

and, as to so much thereof as relates to the costs, that the decree may be executed as soon as the amount of the costs shall be ascertained by taxation.

authorize any person on behalf of another to address the Court in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction, or to examine witnesses, except where the Court shall have in the exercise of the power conferred by its charter authorized him so to do, or to interfere with the power of the High Court to make rules concerning advocates, vakils and attorneys.

4. Vakils' right to practise in the Presidency Small Cause Courts.
5. Attorney's right to address Court.
6. Recognised agent.

1. Scope of the Section.—It has been held that the words "the power of the High Court" to make rules concerning "advocates, vakils and attorneys" in this Section are not limited to the power of the High Court under Clauses 9 and 10 of the Letters Patent to make rules for the admission of advocates, vakils and attorneys and to their professional conduct, and that they also include the power of the High Court under the Government of India Act, 1915, to make rules regulating the practice of the Court.

2. Right of Advocates to appear and plead on any side. — See Letters Patent, Clauses 9 and 10.
3. Right of Vakils to appear or plead or act on the original side. — See Letters Patent, Clauses 9 and 10.
4. Vakils' right to practise in the Presidency Small Cause Courts. — See Letters Patent, Clauses 9 and 10.

3. Original civil jurisdiction.

1. Amendments made after 1908.—Originally this Section had another sub-section which corresponded to Section 639 of the old Code. It ran as follows:—

"(2) Nothing in this Code shall extend or apply to any Judge of the High Court in the exercise of jurisdiction as an Insolvent Court." That sub-section was repealed by the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, III of 1909, Section 127 and Schedule III thereof.

2. Scope of the Section.— This Section declares that Sections 16, 17 and 20 of the Code shall not apply to the Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their PART X.

RULES

121. [New.] The rules in the First Schedule shall have effect as if enacted in the body of this Code until annulled or altered in accordance with the provisions of this Part.

Effect of rules in First Schedule.

1. Rules.—The re-arrangement of the Code into the "body of the Code" and "Rules," is for the purpose of giving a much needed elasticity to judicial procedure, and to enable minor defects to be remedied, as they arise, without resort to the Legislature.¹ But, except for the fact that the rules in the First Schedule can be amended, annulled or added to by the High Courts, such rules have the same force as if enacted in the body of the Code and it is incorrect to say that they are not so imperative as the Sections in the body of the Code.²

The whole of this Part is new except Sections 129, 130 and 131 which correspond to Section 652 of the old Code.

The rules passed in accordance with the procedure in this Part, are not on the same footing as the circulars in the Manual of Civil Circulars issued by the High Court. Unless the latter is passed under some enactment which gives it the force of law, it would not have the force of law.³

See Section 124 for annulment and alteration of rules.

122. High Courts "constituted by His Majesty by Letters Patent" and the Chief Court of Oudh may, from time to time after previous publication, make rules regulating their own procedure and the procedure of the Civil Courts subject to their superintendence, and may by such rules annul, alter or add to all or any of the rules in the First Schedule.

provisions of the Letters Patent.¹ Similarly, they cannot vary the period of limitation fixed by the Limitation Act for any proceeding.² Thus, a rule requiring a copy of the trial Court's judgment to be filed along with the memorandum of second appeal will not entitle the appellant to exclude the time requisite for obtaining such judgment.³ Nor will a rule dispensing with the necessity of filing a copy of judgment appealed from along with the memorandum of appeal disentitle the appellant from excluding the period requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment.⁴ But a rule extending the provisions of Section 5 of the Limitation Act to applications under Order 9 Rule 9⁵ or Rule 13⁶ of the Code is not ultra vires. The reason is that Section 5 of the Limitation Act expressly applies to any application to which it may be made applicable by any enactment or rule for the time being in force.

The rule-making power of the High Courts is confined to the regulation of procedure.⁷ It was held by a Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court that proviso (b) to O. 21 R. 90 introduced by the Rangoon High Court, as such proviso stood before 27th January 1937, took away an existing right and as such was ultra vires.⁸

4. High Courts to which the Section applies. — The Section as it stood prior to its amendment by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order of 1937, applied to High Courts established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, and the Chief Court of Oudh.⁹ A High Court within the meaning of the Government of India Act, 1915, is a High Court established in British India by Letters Patent. (See Government of India Act, 1915, Section 10.) The Patna High Court being such a Court, Section 122 applies to it.² In an earlier decision of the Patna High Court it was however held that the Section does not apply to the Patna High Court.³ The reason given was that the Patna High Court was not a High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861. Apparently their Lordships' judgment is based on the Section as it stood prior to the amendment by Act XIII of 1916. At that time, the Section did not contain the expression "or the Government of India Act, 1915." It was inserted in the Section by the Amending Act XIII of 1916. Their Lordships' attention does not seem to have been drawn to this amendment. Since the amendment of the Section by the Adaptation of Indian Laws Order of 1937, the Section clearly applies to all High Courts constituted by His Majesty by Letters Patent.

123. [New.] (1) A Committee, to be called the Rule Committee, shall be constituted at the town which is the usual place of sitting of each of the High Courts and of the Chief Court referred to in section 122.

- (b) By the Repealing and Amending Act XVIII of 1919, the words "of the Chief Court" were substituted for the words "Chief Courts." The said words, namely, "of the Chief Court" were, however, repealed by Act XI of 1923. By Act XX of 1925, the words "and of the Chief Court" were again inserted in the Section after the words "High Courts." By Act XXXIV of 1926, the words "Chief Courts" have again been substituted for the words "of the Chief Court."
- (c) In sub-section (2) (a) after the words "District Judge or" the words "in the Punjab or Burma" originally occurred. They were substituted by Act XVIII of 1919 by the words "in Burma." These latter words were also repealed by Act XI of 1923.

124. [New.] Every Rule Committee shall make a report to the High Court established at the town at which it is constituted on any proposal to annul, alter or add to the rules in the First Schedule or to make new rules, and before making any rules under section 122 the High Court shall take such report into consideration.

Committee to report to High Court.

1. Report of the Rule Committee.—The Rule Committee referred to in the Section is the Rule Committee constituted under Section 123. This Section shows that a rule can be passed under Section 122 only after the opinion of the Rule Committee is taken into consideration. It has been held by the Patna High Court that Section 123 as it originally stood did not apply to the Patna High Court and that a rule framed by it without reference to a Rule Committee, at a time when there was no Rule Committee in existence, is not ultra vires.³ A contrary view has, however, been taken in a later case of the same High Court.⁴ See Note 4 to Section 122.

125. [New.] High Courts, other than the Courts specified in section 122, may exercise the powers conferred by that section in such manner and subject to such conditions as the Provincial Government may determine:

Power of other High Courts to make rules.

same approval is made necessary for rules under the provisions in this part of the Code. Neither this Section nor Section 107 of the Government of India Act applies to rules framed by the High Court for the conduct of its own business. Such rule, therefore, need not be sanctioned as required by the Section.¹

127. [New.] Rules so made and approved shall be published in the Official Gazette . . . , and shall from the date of publication or from such other date as may be specified have the same force and effect, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the High Court which made them, as if they had been contained in the First Schedule.

a. Substituted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, Para. 4 (1) for "Gazette of India or in the Local Official Gazette, as the case may be." As under Para. 4 (1) the words "Official Gazette" have to be substituted for "Gazette of India" and also for "Local Official Gazette," the substitution will strictly read "Official Gazette or in the Official Gazette, as the case may be." But the last words are omitted as being redundant.

1. Amendments after 1908.—By Act XXIV of 1917, the word "approved" was substituted for the word "sanctioned" which occurred in the Section as it originally stood.

128. [New.] (1) Such rules shall be not inconsistent with the provisions in the body of this Code, but, subject thereto, may provide for any matters relating to the procedure of Civil Courts.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by sub-section (1) such rules may provide for all or any of the following matters, namely:—

(a) the service of summonses, notices and other processes by post or in any other manner either generally or in any specified areas, and the proof of such service; (b) the maintenance and custody, while under attachment, of live-stock and other moveable property, the fees payable for such maintenance and custody, the sale of such live-stock and property, and the proceeds of such sale;

(c) procedure in suits by way of counter-claim, and the valuation of such suits for the purposes of jurisdiction;

1. Scope of the Section.—This Section enacts that the rules framed under the provisions of this Part may provide for any matter relating to the procedure of Civil Courts and it indicates the sort of rules that may be framed. A rule extending the provisions of Section 5 of the Limitation Act to applications under O. 9 R. 13 of the Code is a matter of procedure and is not ultra vires.¹ But a new rule in lieu of O. 34 R. 2, limiting the right of the mortgagee to recover interest at the mortgage rate for the whole period allowed for redemption is one dealing with substantive rights and is not a rule of procedure. Such a rule will be ultra vires.²

A rule framed under the provisions of this part must not be inconsistent with the provisions in the body of the Code.³ The words "consistent with the body of the Code" mean "consistent with the Sections of the Code" and not with the Rules in the First Schedule which can be altered by the High Court.⁴

This Section relates only to rules to be made under the Code by the High Courts with the advice of the Rule Committee constituted under Section 123. It does not affect the validity of rules framed under the previous Code.⁵

2. Defendant claiming indemnity against third party — Clause (e). — Under this clause rules may be framed relating to procedure when the defendant claims to be entitled to contribution or indemnity against any person whether a party to the suit or not. In England, rules have been framed restricting third party procedure to the cases referred to in Section 128 (2) (e), namely to cases of contribution and indemnity.¹

3. Suit for debts — Summary procedure — Clause (f). — A suit on a negotiable instrument provided for under Order 37 of the Code also falls under the category of suits of the nature referred to in this clause.¹ The period of limitation for a suit under the summary procedure under this clause is six months from the date when the debt or liquidated demand becomes payable or the property becomes recoverable.² Similarly, the period of limitation for an application for leave to defend such a suit is 10 days from the date when the summons is served.³

4. Originating summons — Clause (i). — An originating summons means every summons other than a summons in a pending cause or matter.¹ Where the disputed facts are complex and involve a considerable amount of oral evidence, an originating summons is not the proper procedure to be taken.²

It is doubtful whether a rule under the old Code delegating judicial duties to the Registrar and which was, therefore, ultra vires under the old Code is validated by this Section.²

n. Substituted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, for the original Section.

1. Amendments after 1908.—

By the Amending Act XIII of 1916 the following changes were introduced in the Section:—

(a) The words and figures "or the Government of India Act, 1915" were added after the words "established by the Indian High Courts Act, 1861," which originally occurred in the Section.

(b) The Section as it stood originally, spoke of only the rules that might be made under Section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act of 1861. After the amendment of 1916, it mentioned rules that might be made by High Courts under Section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act of 1861 or under Section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915.

By the Repealing and Amending Act XXIV of 1917 the word "approval" was substituted for the word "sanction."

MISCELLANEOUS

132. [S. 640.]

Exemption of certain women from personal appearance.

and manners of the country, ought not to be compelled to appear in public shall be exempt from personal appearance in Court.

[1877, S. 640; 1859, S. 21. See O. 26 R. 1.]

Synopsis

1. Customs and manners of the country.
2. "Shall be exempt from personal appearance in Court."
3. Sub-section (2) — Exemption of women from arrest in execution.

1. Customs and manners of the country. — This Section applies to women, who according to the customs and manners of the country, ought not to be compelled to appear in public, e. g., pardashin ladies.¹ The custom set up must not be one of a varying or uncertain character.² The right conferred by the Section does not depend on the rank or station in life of a lady,³ and cannot be refused on the ground that the lady has appeared in public before⁴ or a charge of immorality is made against her.⁵ Even though a lady may have given up the use of the pardah she is entitled to the benefit of the Section, if, having regard to her social position and the feelings of her class, the Court is satisfied that she should not be compelled to appear in the witness-box.⁶ But a lady may completely alter her mode of life and cease to be included in the statutory description of a woman "who, according to the customs and manners of the country, ought not to be compelled to appear in public." When this transformation has taken place, she can no longer claim, as of right, the statutory exemption formulated in Section 132.⁷

2. "Shall be exempt from personal appearance in Court." — The exemption from personal appearance under this Section is a right which no Court has power to refuse,¹ and applies to parties as well as witnesses.² According to the Calcutta High Court the exemption is only in respect of appearance and not attendance in Court. Women can be compelled to come to Court, so long as they do not become visible to the public gaze.³ The High Court of Allahabad has, however, held that the words "personal appearance" used in the Section mean "personal attendance" and that an exempted person cannot be compelled to attend Court.⁴ The Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has also taken the same view.⁵ If a commission is issued for the examination of a woman entitled to the benefit of this Section, she cannot decline to be examined at any place other than of her own choice.⁶

As to exemption from personal appearance in Court in criminal cases, see Criminal Procedure Code, Section 503 and the undermentioned cases.⁷ See Sections 20 and 32 (ii) of the C. P. Land Revenue Act (II of 1917) and Section 53 (2) of the Bombay Salt Act (II of 1890) for the application of this Section and Section 133 to proceedings under the said Acts.

3. Sub-section (2). — Exemption of women from arrest in execution. — The Code exempts women from arrest in execution of money decrees (see Section 56) and decrees for restitution of conjugal rights (see O. 21 R. 32).

133. [S. 641.] (1) The Provincial Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, exempt from personal appearance in Court any person whose rank, in the opinion of such Government, entitles him to the privilege of exemption.

other persons.

(2) The names and residences of the persons so exempted shall, from time to time, be forwarded to the High Court by the Provincial Government and a list of such persons shall be kept in such Court, and a list of such persons as reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of each Court subordinate to the High Court shall be kept in such subordinate Court.

Synopsis

1. Legislative changes. 2. Scope of the Section.

1. Legislative changes.—The words "and may, by like notification, withdraw such privilege" which occurred in the corresponding Section 641 of the former Code have been omitted in the present Section.

2. Scope of the Section.—No person, of whatever position and respectability he may be, is entitled to exemption from personal appearance under this Section in the absence of a notification by the Government, even though it may be derogatory to his dignity to attend personally in Court as a witness.¹ But where a notification under this Section exists, the exemption is absolute and not even the Court suo motu can compel personal attendance.² See also Notes under Order 26 Rule 1.

134. [New.] The provisions of sections 55, 57 and 59 Arrest other than in execution of decree. shall apply, so far as may be, to all persons arrested under this Code.

1. Scope of the Section.—Sections 55, 57 and 59 refer in terms to the arrest of a judgment-debtor, i. e., to arrest in execution of a decree. The present Section makes the provisions of those Sections applicable to all arrests under the Code.

135. [S. 642 and compare Ss. 572 and 573.] (1) No Judge, Magistrate or other judicial officer shall be liable to arrest under civil process while going to, presiding in, or returning from, his Court.

(2) Where any matter is pending before a tribunal³ having jurisdiction therein, or believing in good faith that it has such jurisdiction, the parties⁴ thereto, their pleaders, mukhtars, revenue-agents and recognized agents, and their witnesses acting in obedience to a summons, shall be exempt from arrest under civil process⁵

1. Legislative changes. — The following changes should be noted :

- (a) The words "and except as provided in section 337 A, sub-section (5) and sections 256 and 643" which occurred in the beginning of sub-section (2) of the corresponding Section 642 of the Code of 1882 have been omitted.
- (b) The words "other than process issued by such tribunal for contempt of Court" in sub-section (2) are new. See Note 3.
- (c) Sub-section (3) is new.

2. Scope and object of Section. — The exemption conferred by this Section is not for the personal benefit of the individual, but for the furthering of public interest and the better administration of justice.¹

The privilege is really that of the Court and the principle on which it is founded is that freedom from the fear of arrest encourages willing attendance and thus tends to the advancement of justice.²

In cases in which this Section does not, in terms apply, the English law should be followed. The English law in this respect is approximately the same as the law under the Section.³

3. No exemption in case of process for contempt of Court. — It was held by the Calcutta High Court that the exemption created does not apply in the case of process issued for contempt of Court.¹ The Section has been amended in the present Code so as to give effect to that ruling.

- (1) He can apply for his release to the Court which ordered his arrest¹ or to the High Court under S. 491 (1) (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code.²
 - (2) On being released from such illegal arrest, he is entitled to a refund of the sum paid by him to obtain his release.³
 - (3) He cannot, however, maintain a suit for damages for illegal arrest in the absence of proof of malice and want of reasonable cause.⁴
 - (4) He can prosecute the person causing the arrest for an offence under Section 342 of the Indian Penal Code.⁵
- 10. Appeal.—An order disallowing a claim to exemption from arrest under this Section is one falling under Section 47 and as such is appealable.¹

135A. (1) No person shall be liable to arrest or detention in prison under civil arrest and detention under civil process.

(a) if he is a member of a unicameral Legislature or of either Chamber of a bicameral Legislature constituted under the Government of India Act, 1935, during the continuance of any meeting of such Legislature or Chamber;

1. Scope. — This Section is new. It was inserted into the Code by Act XXIII of 1925. Its object is to confer on members of the Imperial and Provincial Legislatures immunity from arrest and imprisonment under civil process to the extent necessary to enable them to discharge their duties as members of such Legislatures.

136. [S. 648.] (1) Where an application is made that any person shall be arrested or that any property shall be attached under any provision of this Code not relating to the execution of decrees, and such person resides or such property is situate outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court to which the application is made, the Court may, in its discretion, issue a warrant of arrest or make an order of attachment, and send to the District Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such person or property resides or is situate a copy of the warrant or order, together with the probable amount of the costs of the arrest or attachment.

Procedure where person to be arrested or property to be attached is outside district.

(2) The District Court shall, on receipt of such copy and amount, cause the arrest or attachment to be made by its own officers, or by a Court subordinate to itself, and shall inform the Court which issued or made such warrant or order of the arrest or attachment.

(3) The Court making an arrest under this section shall send the person arrested to the Court by which the warrant of arrest was issued, unless he shows cause to the satisfaction of the former Court why he should not be sent to the latter Court, or unless he furnishes sufficient security for his appearance before the latter Court or for satisfying any decree that may be passed against him by that Court, in either of which cases the Court making the arrest shall release him.

(4) Where a person to be arrested or moveable property to be attached under this section is within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court, it shall be the duty of the High Court to cause the arrest or attachment to be made by its officers, or by a Court subordinate to itself, and shall inform the Court which issued or made such warrant or order of the arrest or attachment.

1. Legislative changes. —

This Section corresponds to Section 648 of the former Code. The chief alteration made is that the words "where an application is made" have been substituted in the place of the words "where any Court desires." As to the effect of this alteration, see Note 7.

Alterations prior to Code of 1908 :

The words in the Code of 1877, "outside the district within which the Court issuing the warrant of arrest or making the order of attachment is situated" were converted in the Code of 1882 into the words "outside the local limits of its jurisdiction." As to the effect of this alteration, see Note 5. It may be noted that there is no material change in this respect in the present Code.

2. The arrest or attachment must be under any provision of the Code.

— This Section in terms applies only to cases in which the arrest or attachment has been ordered under any provision of the Code. Hence it applies to an order for arrest under O. 39 R. 2 for disobedience of a temporary injunction.¹ As to order for arrest for contempt of Court, see Note 4.

3. Such arrest or attachment to be otherwise than in execution of a decree.

— The Section expressly provides that the procedure laid down by it does not apply to arrest or attachment in execution of a decree. The procedure to be followed in such cases is laid down in Section 39, ante.

4. Order of arrest for contempt of Court. — An order for arrest for contempt of Court passed by a Judge on the original side of the High Court is not one of temporary injunction against party, resident outside jurisdiction.

— Enforcement under this Section of an order

7. Power of Court to order attachment before judgment of property situated outside its jurisdiction. — Under the former Code there was a conflict of decisions as to whether a Court had the power to order the attachment before judgment of property outside its jurisdiction. On the one hand it was held that under Sections 483 and 484 (corresponding to the present O. 38 R. 5) a Court could not attach before judgment property outside its jurisdiction. It was further held that the old Section 648 (corresponding to Section 136) did not enlarge the Court's power in this respect and that that Section applied only where the Court had power to order such attachment under any other provision of the Code.¹ On the other hand, it was held that under Section 648 a Court did have the power to order the attachment before judgment of property situated outside its local jurisdiction.² Under the present Code, the words in the old Sections 483 and 484 which imposed the restrictions as to the property being within the Court's jurisdiction have been omitted in O. 38 R. 5 and the words "where any Court desires" in Section 648 have been replaced in the present Section by the words "where an application is made." Hence, there is no room for doubt under the present Code that Section 136 read with O. 38 R. 5 (1) (a) empowers a Court to order the attachment before judgment of property situated outside its jurisdiction.³

137. [S. 645 and compare Ss. 49, 200, 201.] (1) The language of sub-ordinate Courts. High Court shall continue to be the language of such subordinate Court until the Provincial Government otherwise directs.

(2) The Provincial Government may declare what shall be the language of any such Court and in what character applications to and proceedings in such Courts shall be written.

(3) Where this Code requires or allows anything other than the recording of evidence to be done in writing in any such Court, such writing may be in English; but if any party or his pleader is unacquainted with English a translation into the language of the Court shall, at his request, be supplied to him; and the Court shall make such order as it thinks fit in respect of the payment of the costs of such translation.

a. Substituted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, for "Local Government."

1. Sub-section (3). — This Section corresponds to Section 645 of the former Code. Sub-section (3) is new. It deals with writings other than the record of evidence. Hence pleadings and applications may be in English subject to a translation being supplied to the other side where necessary. Compare Section 138 and O. 18 R. 9.

1. Legislative changes. —

- (1). The words "herein prescribed" have been changed into "provided in this Code in regard to suits."
- (2). The words "other than suits and appeals" have been omitted.

2. To what proceedings the Section applies. — The corresponding Section of the former Code (Section 647) as it originally stood ran as follows :

"The procedure herein prescribed shall be followed, so far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction other than suits or appeals."

In interpreting this Section there arose a conflict of views as to whether proceedings in execution were "proceedings other than suits or appeals" to which this Section could be applied.¹ In order to set this conflict at rest the Legislature, by Act VI of 1892, added an Explanation to the Section as follows :

"Explanation. — This Section does not apply to applications for the execution of decrees which are proceedings in suits."

In the year 1894, however, the Privy Council had occasion to deal with the question in a case² which arose before the explanation was added to the Section and their Lordships observed as follows :

"Their Lordships think that the proceedings spoken of in Section 647 include original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probates, guardianships and so forth and do not include executions Their Lordships' attention has been called to the recent Act VI of 1892 which would appear to have been passed in order to avoid the disturbance of practice caused by the Allahabad rulings their Lordships have thought it right to state their opinion that the Act of 1892 does nothing more than express the true meaning of the Civil Procedure Code."

The explanation and the words "other than suits and appeals" were thus rendered superfluous and unnecessary and have accordingly been omitted from the present Section. As a result it would therefore seem to be clear that Section 141 does not apply to any proceedings in execution" but only to proceedings which are original matters in the nature of suits. There has however been a conflict of opinion in respect of the following points, due to different interpretations of the said Privy Council decision:

- (1) Whether proceedings under Order 21 Rules 89, 90, 91, 97 and 100 are proceedings in execution or original matters in the nature of suits?
- (2) Whether an application to restore a suit dismissed for default is an original matter in the nature of a suit?

(3) Whether Section 141 applies only to original matters or to all matters whether original or not, provided they are not execution proceedings? On the first point all the Courts except the High Court of Patna and the Chief Court of Oudh have held that such proceedings are proceedings in execution, and that

Section 141 cannot be applied thereto.⁴ A Full Bench decision of the Patna High Court⁵ has held that a proceeding under O. 21 R. 90 is one in execution. But in the undermentioned decisions of the same High Court⁶ it has been held, distinguishing the Full Bench case, that a proceeding under O. 21 R. 100 is an original matter in the nature of suits to which Section 141 can be applied. The Oudh Chief Court has held that a proceeding under O. 21 R. 90 is an original matter and that Section 141 applies thereto.⁷

On the second point the High Courts of Madras⁸ and Lahore,⁹ the Chief Court of Oudh¹⁰ and the Judicial Commissioner's Court at Nagpur¹¹ hold that such a proceeding is an original matter and that therefore an application under O. 9 R. 9, will lie to restore a petition under O. 9 R. 9, which is itself dismissed for default. The Allahabad,¹² Calcutta¹³ and Patna¹⁴ High Courts are inclined to the view that such a proceeding is not an original proceeding to which Section 141 applies. - The following are not proceedings of the kind contemplated by the Section —
- (1) Application for review of order dismissing execution application.³⁷
 - (2) Proceedings under Order 21 Rule 58.³⁸

But independent of this Section some of the provisions of the Code may apply directly and of their own force to matters which do not come within the meaning of the word "proceedings" as defined by the Privy Council.³⁹ Thus, a proceeding in execution can be reviewed under O. 47 R. 1 by force of its own language and not by virtue of Section 141.⁴⁰

In the undermentioned decision⁴¹ the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court expressed the view that the provisions of Order 7 apply, by reason of this Section, to memoranda of appeals and that an appeal can be rejected under O. 7 R. 11. It is submitted that the view is not correct as an appeal is not an original proceeding. But, O. 7 R. 11 will apply to appeals by reason of the provisions of Section 107 ante. (See Notes to Section 107.)

3. Appeals in execution matters.—As Section 141 does not apply to execution proceedings but only to original matters in the nature of suits, it is conceived that it does not apply to appeals from orders in execution.¹ But independently of Section 141, some of the provisions of the Code in regard to appeals may apply directly to appeals from orders in execution. Thus, where an order in execution is appealed from as a decree under Section 47, the Appellate Court may require the appellant to give security for costs under O. 41 R. 10.² Similarly, the Appellate Court can stay execution of the decree under Section 47 independently of Section 141 and of O. 41 R. 5.³

4. Proceedings for restitution. — Section 141 does not make Section 144 of the Code applicable to execution proceedings.¹ As to the inherent powers of the Court to order restitution in such cases, see Section 144, Note 34.

5. Letters Patent Appeal. — Letters Patent Appeals are not original proceedings of the kind contemplated by Section 141.¹ But by virtue of Section 117 of the Code, the provisions of the Code are applicable to High Courts except as provided in Part IX or Part X or in Rules. Hence the provisions of the Code may be followed in Letters Patent Appeals.²

6. "Court of civil jurisdiction." — The proceedings to which Section 141 applies are proceedings in a Court of civil jurisdiction. A proceeding under the Lunacy Act, 1912, is a "proceeding in a Court of civil jurisdiction." Consequently, the provisions of the Code as to verification of pleadings apply to such a proceeding.¹ Disciplinary proceedings under the Legal Practitioners' Act are, according to the High Courts of Madras² and Calcutta,³ "proceedings in a Court of civil jurisdiction." The High Court of Patna, on the other hand, has held that they are not.⁴ Proceedings under Section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code for sanction to prosecute are not civil proceedings although they may be before the Judge of a Civil Court.⁵ A Revenue Court is a Court of civil jurisdiction.⁶

7. "Procedure provided in this Code." — Section 141 deals with procedure and procedure alone.¹ It does not confer any substantive right not expressly given elsewhere by the Code. Thus, a right of appeal² cannot be claimed merely on the strength of Section 141.³ Similarly, the Section does not confer a right to refer to

Similarly, the principle that a suit against a dead man is not maintainable, is a point of substance and not of procedure, and cannot therefore be applied to an application to set aside an ex parte decree, so as to make it incompetent by reason of the fact that the deceased plaintiff's name, instead of his legal representatives, appears in the application as a party.⁸

But Sections 10 and 11⁹ and O. 39 R. 1¹⁰ of the Code are rules of procedure and may therefore be applied to "proceedings" within the meaning of Section 141. 8. "In regard to suits."—The word "suits" in Section 141 is used in a comprehensive sense so as to include appeals which are only continuations of suits. Hence, the procedure prescribed by the Code in regard to appeals governs appeals arising out of miscellaneous proceedings and miscellaneous proceedings in the nature of appeals.¹

9. "As far as it can be made applicable."—Section 141 does not make the whole of the procedure in regard to suits applicable to proceedings under the Section. Such procedure applies only as far as it can be made applicable.¹ Thus, the appointment of a guardian cannot be referred to arbitration because guardianship is not a matter purely of private right.² Similarly, a surety for a guardian cannot be proceeded against in execution under Section 145, Civil Procedure Code, because even the guardian himself cannot be proceeded against in execution in that way.³ So also, though the procedure laid down in Order 22 requiring a plaintiff to bring on record the legal representatives of a deceased defendant may apply to applications to sue in forma pauperis, it does not follow that the penalties provided in O. 22 R. 4 can, without express provision in that behalf, apply to such applications.⁴

1. Legislative changes. — Under the corresponding Section 583 of the Code of 1882¹ a practice had grown up which was not justified by the language of that Section
Section 144 — Note 1
I. S. 583 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows: —
"Where a party entitled to any benefit (by way of restitution or otherwise) under a decree passed in an appeal under this chapter desires to obtain execution of the same, he shall apply to the Court

Sub-section (2), barring the institution of suits for relief claimable under this Section, is new. It compels litigants to have matters falling within the Section cleared up in proceedings under this Section only.³ It necessarily implies the widest possible construction of sub-section (1).⁴

2. Scope and object of the Section. — It is a cardinal principle of law that the acts of Courts should not be allowed to work injury on the suitors.¹ In the leading English case of Rodger v. Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris,² Lord Cairns said :

"One of the first and highest duties of all Courts is to take care that the act of the Court does no injury to the suitors and when the expression 'the act of the Court' is used it does not mean merely the act of the primary Court or of any intermediate Court of appeal but the act of the Court as a whole from the lowest Court which entertains jurisdiction over the matter to the highest Court which finally disposes of the case."

The doctrine of restitution is based upon this principle³ and contemplates a case where property has been received by the decree-holder under his decree and the decree is subsequently wholly or partially reversed or varied in other proceedings. In such a case the law raises an obligation on the party who received the benefit of the erroneous judgment to make restitution to the other party for what he had lost;⁴ and this obligation, it is the duty of the Courts to enforce, unless it is shown that restitution would be clearly contrary to the real justice of the case.⁵

Section 144 only embodies this doctrine of restitution and does not confer any new substantive rights which a successful party did not possess under the general law.⁶ It merely regulates the exercise of the rights and prescribes a convenient procedure therefor.⁷

The Section is a salutary provision of law enacted with a view to shorten litigation and to afford speedy relief and should not, therefore, be narrowly construed.⁸

which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred; and such Court shall proceed to execute the decree passed in appeal, according to the rules hereinbefore prescribed for execution of decrees in suits."

Again, the Section will apply only where a decree is varied or reversed. It will not apply where an order (which is not a decree) is varied or reversed³ though in such cases, the Court can order restitution under its inherent powers, on the analogy of Section 144.⁴ The Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court has however held that the word "decree" in Section 144 covers an "order".⁵ The decision is clearly against the definition of the word "decree" in Section 2 (2) of the Code and further, the decisions cited by that Court in support of its view do not bear it out. The decision cannot therefore be accepted as sound.

4. Modes of variation and reversal. — Section 583 of the old Code allowed restitution only in cases where the decree was reversed in appeal preferred under Chapters 41 and 42 of that Code, corresponding to Orders 41 and 42 of the present Code. It did not, therefore apply to variations and reversal otherwise than in appeal¹ nor to a variation or reversal in appeal to the Privy Council.²

This Section contains no such restriction as to the manner in which a decree should be varied or reversed and none can be legitimately read into it, except, of course, that it should be in "accordance with law."³ The Section has also been transferred to the Chapter headed "Miscellaneous" from its position in the Chapter headed "Appeals from Original Decrees" under the old Code. The effect of it is to extend its operation to all cases of reversals, howsoever the variation has been effected.⁴

merits.² As to the effect of the subsequent passing of the same decree, where the sale has not been set aside before the passing of such decree, see Note 20, infra.

6. Effect of reversal of main decree on dependent decrees. — It is a general rule of law that upon a reversal of a judgment, order or decree, all connected or dependent judgments or orders fall with it.¹

Illustrations

1. A obtains a preliminary decree for partition against B. Pending appeal by B therefrom, A obtains a final decree, executes it and recovers money from B. The preliminary decree is then set aside by the Appellate Court. B is entitled to claim restitution from A of the amount recovered from him. The reason is that no effect remains in the final decree after the reversal of the preliminary decree.²

2. A obtains a decree for enhanced rent against B. Pending appeal by B therefrom, A files another suit against B for enhanced rent for another period and obtains a decree conditional on the first decree being confirmed in appeal, and recovers money from B in execution of that decree. The first decree is subsequently reversed on appeal. Held, that B is entitled to claim restitution from A of the money recovered from him under the second decree, as it was made conditional on the confirmation of the first decree and became infructuous on its being reversed in appeal.³

7. Who may apply for restitution. — In order to entitle a person to apply under this Section two conditions must be satisfied —

(1) He must be a party to the decree varied or reversed,¹ and

(2) He must have become "entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise" under the reversing decree.² But it is not necessary that the decree by which the original decree is reversed or varied should declare the party's right to restitution. Where the effect of the decree of the Appellate Court is to reverse that of the lower Court, the party against whom the lower Court's erroneous decree has been enforced and who has lost possession of the property is entitled to apply for restitution under this Section irrespective of the question whether or not the appellate decree declares the party's right to the property.³

In either case the auction-purchaser is entitled to a return of the purchase price less the mesne profits he has enjoyed. In fact where an auction sale is set aside it is incumbent upon the Court to order that the recovery of possession by the judgment-debtor is made conditional on his paying up to the purchaser the purchase-money.²

Where, however, no such conditional order is passed, can the auction-purchaser apply under this Section for the return of the purchase-money? It has been held that he cannot. The reason is that he is neither a party to the decree varied or reversed nor is he a person entitled to any benefit under the reversing decree.³

11. Against whom restitution can be granted. — Under Section 583 of the Code of 1882 an appellate decree reversing a decree of the lower Court had to contain, or was deemed to contain, a direction for restitution in favour of the successful appellant, who had, in order to claim restitution, to execute the appellate decree. This, of course, could not be done against a person who was not a party to the appellate decree.

It was therefore held that the transferee of a decree reversed in appeal, or other person who was not a party to the appeal, could not be proceeded against under the Section.¹

There is no such restriction under the present Section. A right to claim restitution may now be enforced against a party or his representative or assignee even if he is not a party to the appeal.² A mortgages to C certain property and then sues B,

14 who is in possession thereof, in effectment, and obtains a decree and gets delivery of possession in execution. Pending appeal by B, C sues on his mortgage, obtains a decree and purchases the property in execution of his decree and obtains possession. A's decree is reversed in appeal. Held, B can claim restitution from C of the property taken from him. The reason is that C is a representative of A and cannot be in a better position than A.³

Where the liability to make restitution is a joint one, a claim against some only of the persons liable in the absence of the others is not sustainable.⁴

Restitution can be ordered under this Section only against a party who has benefited under the reversed decree.⁵ Thus, suppose that in a suit for possession A obtains a decree against B and his usufructuary mortgagees. The decree being reversed on appeal B is given possession instead of the mortgagees. Here the mortgagees cannot claim the mortgaged property from B by way of restitution. The reason is that B was given possession of the property not under the reversed decree of the lower Court but under the reversing decree of the Appellate Court.⁶

12. Transferee of a decree. — See Note 11 above.

13. Auction-purchaser. —

The question whether restitution can be claimed against an auction-purchaser on the reversal of the decree in execution of which the sale took place, depends upon the question whether he is a bona fide purchaser. By the phrase "bona fide purchaser" the Courts imply the test of knowledge of the pending proceedings to set aside the decree, and opportunity to defend his own interests in those proceedings.¹

In the case of bona fide purchasers the rule is that the sale will be upheld notwithstanding the reversal of the decree,² because otherwise there will be less inducement to intending purchasers to buy at an execution sale, and consequently less chance of property fetching proper value at such sales.³ Another reason is that a purchaser cannot be expected to go behind the judgment to inquire into the irregularities in the suit.⁴

This, however, does not mean that an execution sale cannot be set aside on other grounds such as want of jurisdiction to sell the property,⁵ fraud,⁶ want of saleable interest in the judgment-debtor⁷ and, the sale being affected by the doctrine of lis pendens,⁸ etc. In such cases restitution can be ordered against the auction-purchaser⁹ under the inherent powers of the Court.¹⁰

The reason of the rule upholding an execution sale in favour of a bona fide purchaser disappears where the decree-holder is himself the purchaser, and has notice of all the proceedings in the suit. The rule itself consequently becomes inapplicable in accordance with the maxim cessante ratione legis, cessat et ipsa lex.¹¹ The decree-holder purchaser will therefore be bound, on the reversal of the decree, to make restitution to the person entitled thereto.¹² An assignee from such purchaser will be in no better position than his assignor though he is a bona fide purchaser from the decree-holder,¹³ unless the reversal of the decree has been obtained fraudulently by the decree-holder himself after the assignment.¹⁴

In the principles enunciated above there is no distinction between the auction-purchaser at a sale in execution of a money decree and that in execution of a mortgage decree.¹⁵

The above discussion relates to cases where the decree of the first Court is reversed subsequently. Where the decree is modified the sale need not necessarily be set aside even in cases where the decree-holder is the purchaser. See Note 20 infra.

16. Trustee. — Where a trustee of a temple obtains a decree and in execution thereof recovers money and hands it over to the temple and then the decree is reversed in appeal, restitution can be had only against the temple and not against the trustee personally.¹

17. What Court can grant restitution. — Section 583 of the old Code required that the person entitled to restitution "shall apply to the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred." Thus, where a first Appellate Court reverses a decree of the original Court, which reversal is again set aside by the second Appellate Court, it was held that the application should be made to the first Appellate Court against whose decree the second appeal was preferred and not to the original Court.¹

Under the present Section, the application should be made in all cases to "the Court of first instance." It is only the Court which executes the decree that has jurisdiction to order restitution to the parties.²

Where the Court of first instance loses its territorial jurisdiction or ceases to exist, the Court which gets such jurisdiction will be "the Court of first instance."³

Where a decree is transferred for execution to another Court, the latter Court can exercise the same powers as the Court of first instance.⁴

The jurisdiction of the Court of first instance is not ousted by the fact that the value of the subject-matter of the restitution exceeds the limits of its pecuniary jurisdiction,⁵ nor by the fact that after its decree has been set aside, the case has been transferred for re-hearing to another Court.⁶

18. Extent of power to grant restitution. — Before the passing of the Code of 1908, there was no legislative expression as to the extent of the power of the Court to make restitution. This Section now specifies that the power extends to "cause such restitution to be made as will, so far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such a decree as has been varied or reversed." Courts ought not to adopt a narrow construction so as to restrict the application of this salutary provision of law which has been enacted with a view to shorten litigation, and afford speedy relief.¹ In L. Guran Ditta v. T. R. Ditta,² their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows :

"The duty of the Court when awarding restitution under Section 144 of the Code is imperative. It shall place the applicant in the position in which he would have been if the order had not been made : and for this purpose the Court is armed with powers (the 'may' is empowering, not discretionary) as to mesne profits, interest and so forth."

19. "Shall cause restitution to be made." — The Section is mandatory.¹ The Court has no discretion to grant restitution or not, in matters falling within the terms of the Section.² It is the legal effect of a decree of reversal that a party against whom the decree reversed was given is to have restitution of all that he had been deprived of under it.³ It is not necessary that the reversing decree should contain any direction or provision for restitution.⁴

But in cases not falling within the terms of the Section restitution is not a matter of right but depends upon the discretion of the Court and will be ordered only when the justice of the case demands it.⁵

20. "Place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree as has been varied or reversed." — The object of restitution is to restore the status quo ante between the parties.¹ Under the old Code the power of

The restoration is to be as nearly as possible to their positions at the time the erroneous order was passed and not to later positions taken up by them of their own accord as resulting from that order.⁹ Such restoration may be ordered after taking evidence in the matter, if necessary.¹⁰

Where a party has obtained possession or recovered money under an erroneous decree, it will not be a restoration of the status quo ante merely to restore the possession or to return the money recovered. The party deprived of it would have lost the profit of the property or the interest on the money, of which he had been deprived. The Court has therefore been empowered to pass "any orders including orders for the refund of costs and for the payment of interest, damages, compensation and mesne profits" consequential on the variation or reversal of the decree.¹¹

But the restitution claimed must have been properly consequential on the reversal or variation.¹² Thus, where a judgment-debtor, pending appeal by him against the decree sells his property and deposits the decree amount in Court fearing that he may not succeed in the appeal, but the appeal is subsequently allowed, he cannot claim damages caused by the private sale, in restitution, he being under no obligation to pay the amount and the damages claimed also not being consequential on the reversal of the decree.¹³

It has been held that where a judgment-debtor against whom an ex parte decree was passed, chooses to set aside the sale held in execution of the decree by making the necessary deposit under O. 21 R. 89 and afterwards the ex parte decree also is set aside, the judgment-debtor would not be entitled to claim a refund of the amount which he had deposited as the auction-purchaser's compensation. The reason given is that such a deposit is not made by the judgment-debtor directly in connexion with the decree which has been passed against him but is made in order that he may obtain a special privilege which the law provides.¹⁴

21. "So far as may be." — It will not be possible in many cases to restore the exact status quo ante between the parties. Crops, for instance, which have been removed by the respondent pending appeal cannot be restored. In such cases the Court can grant damages representing the value (but only the net value) of the moveable property of which the restitution is claimed.¹

The Court is, in fact, bound to do everything and make every order fairly and properly consequential on the reversal of the original judgment so as to restore the parties to the same position as they were in at the time of the erroneous order.² Where each party is found entitled to restitution from the other, the restitution should, as near as possible, be simultaneous. Thus, where an auction sale is set aside, the judgment-debtor can claim restitution only on payment to the purchaser of the purchase money. In such a case the restoration of the property must be made conditional on the payment back of the purchase money so that the mutual restoration is, as far as possible, simultaneous.³

Where a decree for pre-emption obtained by a plaintiff is reversed in appeal, the plaintiff is entitled to restitution of the money deposited by him and which had been taken by the defendant vendee.⁴ In such a case it cannot be said that because the plaintiff is unsuccessful in the appeal, there could be no question of restitution to him.

22. Mesne profits.—The use of the words 'damages,' 'compensation' and 'mesne profits' indicate that the possession obtained under an erroneous decree subsequently reversed is wrongful possession.⁶ On the reversal of the decree, the judgment-debtor will be not only entitled to the possession of the property taken from him but also to mesne profits during the period he was kept out of possession.⁷ Where, however, the Appellate Court sets aside the decree and remands the case for fresh or further enquiry and the question of nature of the possession of the party who has been in possession

which it must be the object of all Courts to arrive at, will not have been arrived at unless the persons who have had their money improperly taken from them have the money restored to them with interest during the time that the money has been withheld".²

Where no interest is claimed in an application for restitution it will not be allowed.⁴

In granting restitution it is the injury which has been caused to the party who is ultimately successful, that the Court seeks to remedy. The Court is not concerned with the actual benefit which may or may not have been gained by the other party.⁵ Thus, where a defendant against whom a decree was passed deposited into Court certain amount which the decree-holder did not draw out as he was unable to furnish security as ordered by the Court, it was held that the defendant was entitled, on the reversal of the decree, to get back the amount with interest thereon, though the other party did not get any benefit from the money deposited.⁶

24. Refund of compensation money in land acquisition cases.—Where Government deposits money in a land acquisition case and that is taken by a party and on appeal to the High Court the amount payable is reduced, the party must refund the excess amount to the Government with interest in accordance with the principle of restitution.¹

property or money should have been obtained in execution of the decree which was subsequently reversed.¹ The Section would apply even if the possession of the property or money was taken otherwise than in execution provided it was obtained *under colour of, or in consequence of, the decree.*²

Where possession is obtained by the decree-holder independent of, and in opposition, to the decree, this Section does not apply. Thus, where A gets only a decree for injunction against B and then enters into possession with the aid of the police and the decree is subsequently reversed in appeal, B cannot be given restitution by removal of the superstructure erected on the property.³

26. Splitting up claim of restitution. — The principle of constructive res judicata, whether Section 11 Explanation IV or O. 2 R. 2 of the Code is invoked in its aid, cannot be applied to proceedings under this Section.¹ Where therefore a party is entitled by way of restitution to two reliefs, the claiming of one only of such reliefs in an application does not bar a subsequent application for the other relief. Thus, where A is entitled to the restoration of a property and mesne profits, a first application for the restitution of the property does not bar a subsequent application for the *mesne profits.*² The same principle will apply where a party is entitled to restitution of a sum of money and the interest thereon.³

A second application for the same relief as was previously granted is however clearly barred on the principles of *res judicata.*⁴

See also the undermentioned case.⁵

27. Pecuniary jurisdiction of Court in awarding restitution. — See Note 17, ante.

28. Security for restitution. — The Appellate Court has an inherent power to call upon the respondent to furnish security (notwithstanding the decree has been executed) for the due performance of any decree that might be made in appeal.¹

If the application is one in execution, then Section 141 would not apply thereto. Otherwise it would apply and an application under Section 144 dismissed for default may be restored by applying O. 9 R. 9 thereto.⁵

The nature of proceeding becomes important also where the question is whether Article 151 or Article 152 of the Limitation Act applies to such proceedings (see Note 33), and whether the court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal from an order under this Section is to be ad valorem under Schedule I, Article 1 of the Court-fees Act, or under Schedule II, Article 11 thereof. (See Note 32.)

The adjustment of a claim for restitution before it has been ordered by the Court is not the adjustment of a decree.⁷

See also Notes 31, 32 and 33, below.

31. Appeal — Tenability of. — The determination of a question under this Section has been expressly declared to be a decree under Section 2 (2) and is appealable as such under Section 96.¹ But does an adjudication in an application for restitution not falling within Section 144 amount to a decree? There is a difference of opinion on this point. The Calcutta High Court holds that it is a decree under Section 2 (2).² The Patna High Court holds that it is not;³ while Mr. Justice Chapman of the same Court has expressed an obiter dictum in the undermentioned case⁴ that it will amount to a decree. The Nagpur High Court has held that an order for restitution under Section 151 is appealable on the analogy of an order under this Section.⁵ The Madras High Court has held that an order for restitution made as between the parties to the

The decision in order to constitute a determination of a question under this Section and therefore a decree, must have been one on the merits of the application and must not relate to matters incidentally connected with or collateral to the decision of any such question.⁷

An order dismissing an application for restitution on the ground that the applicant had already obtained restitution⁸ or an order holding that the application is not time-barred⁹ are not decisions on the merits and therefore are not decrees which are appealable. But it has been held that the rejection of a prayer for restitution under this Section amounts to a determination of a question under this Section.¹⁰ It has been held by the Rangoon High Court that an order on an application on the original side of the High Court under this Section is not a "judgment" within the meaning of Clause 13 of the Letters Patent of the Rangoon High Court and hence is not appealable.¹¹

Under the Court-fees Act, 1870, the court-fee payable on memorandum of appeal against decrees is ad valorem under Schedule I Article 1 thereof. But under Section 35 of the Act, the Government of India and the Local Governments have directed that the fee payable on appeals from orders under Section 47 of the Code [which are "decrees" under Section 2 (2) of the Code] shall be limited to the amounts chargeable with a fixed fee under Article 11 Schedule II of that Act.¹

If an order under Section 144 is therefore considered to be one under Section 47, then the fee chargeable is that under Article 11 Schedule II of the Court-fees Act. If not, it will be payable as on an appeal from a decree ad valorem under Article 1 of Schedule I of the Act, on the amount dealt with by the order.

There is a conflict of decisions as to whether an order under this Section is to be considered as one under Section 47 for purposes of court-fees. According to the High Courts of Madras,² Nagpur,³ Patna⁴ and Lahore,⁵ such an order is to be treated as falling under Section 47 for purposes of court-fees. But the contrary view has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad,⁶ Calcutta⁷ and Rangoon⁸ according to which an appeal from such an order must be stamped with ad valorem court-fee.

33. Limitation.—There is a great divergence of judicial opinion as to whether Article 181 or Article 182 of the Limitation Act applies to an application for restitution under this Section.

Article 182 applies to an application for the execution of a decree or order of a Civil Court, and Article 181 applies where no limitation is provided elsewhere for such applications.

Under Section 583 of the old Code, an application for restitution under that Section was one in execution of the appellate decree and Article 179 (now Article 182) of the Limitation Act of 1877 was applied.¹ In cases not falling within that Section, the application was not treated as one in execution of any decree and the Article applied was 178 (now 181) of the Limitation Act, 1877.²

Under the present Code, the Madras, Bombay, Patna, Rangoon and Oudh Courts hold that an application for restitution is one in "execution of a decree" within Article 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908.³ Further, Section 6 of that Act would also apply to such cases, and in cases of disability of the applicant, the time would be extended by virtue thereof.⁴

The other High Courts hold that an application for restitution is not a proceeding in "execution of a decree" and that therefore the Article applicable is 181.⁵ The High Courts of Allahabad, Calcutta and Lahore have held that where a decree reversing that of a trial Court is confirmed in second appeal, the period of limitation for an application for restitution begins to run from the date of the lower Appellate Court's decree and not from the date of the decree in second appeal confirming the reversing decree.⁶ The High Court of Allahabad⁷ has, however, held that, where the application for restitution is for recovery of mesne profits, time does not begin to run until possession of the property has been restored to the successful applicant.

An application for restitution on the reversal of the decree of the High Court by the Privy Council is one to "enforce" the decree of the Privy Council and is therefore governed by Article 183 of the Limitation Act.⁸

34. Inherent power of Court to grant restitution.—It has already been seen in Note 2 that this Section does not confer any new rights which a successful party did not possess otherwise under the general law.¹ The jurisdiction to make restitution is inherent in every Court and will be exercised whenever the justice of the case demands it.² Such powers will be exercised, where an

1. A purchases a property in a sale held in execution of a decree and obtains possession thereof. On the application of B, the judgment-debtor, the sale is set aside. B applies for restitution of possession and mesne profits from A. Does the application lie under Section 144? No: for, no decree has been varied or reversed. But the restitution can be granted under Section 151,⁵ on the principle that an erroneous act of the Court should not be allowed to do injury to the suitors.⁶

2. A obtains a decree against B and recovers the money due under the decree by execution. Subsequently it appears to the Court that B was dead at the time of the institution of the suit. The decree is a nullity and the Court, having levied execution while there was legally no decree, has inherent power to rectify the mistake and order restitution.⁷

There is one distinction between the exercise of the powers under S. 144 and the exercise of the Court's inherent jurisdiction. While the Section is mandatory the exercise of the power under Section 151 depends upon the discretion of the Court which will be used only in the interests of justice.⁸

The inherent powers of a Court do not extend to convert an application which has nothing to do with restitution into one for restitution.⁹ Nor does it extend to ordering restitution against a person who is neither a party to nor bound by any order of the appellate or reversing Court.¹⁰

36. Revision.—No revision lies from an order on an application falling under Section 144, for such an order is appealable as a decree under Section 2 (2).¹ Where the Court refuses to order restitution in the exercise of its discretion in a case not falling within Section 144, the order is not open to revision.²

1. Legislative changes. — The present Section has altered the law in the following respects:—

1. The old Section applied only to sureties for the performance of decrees. It did not apply to securities for the fulfilment of a condition imposed by an order of Court. It was also doubtful whether it applied to securities for the performance of appellate decrees and to securities for restitution of property taken in execution of a decree. It did not also apply to securities for payment of money which were not securities for the performance of decrees. The present Section applies to all these kinds of securities.

2. The word "personally" has been newly added in the present Section before the word "liable."

3. The competency of an appeal from an order under this Section is made clearer by the provision as to the surety being deemed a "party" for purposes of appeal.

4. Notice under the present Section need not be in writing.

2. Scope, applicability and object of the Section. — The object of this Section is to provide a summary remedy for the enforcement of the liability of a surety who has given security for any of the purposes enumerated in the Section. But for this Section, the party for whose benefit the security has been given would have to file a separate suit to enforce the security. This Section dispenses with the necessity of a suit and enables him to enforce the security by execution proceedings in the same manner as if the surety was a party to the decree or order in respect of which security has been given.¹ But the procedure provided by the Section applies only to the extent to which the surety has rendered himself personally liable.

2a. Security by person primarily responsible — Applicability of Section. — A surety is one who takes upon himself, and guarantees the performance of, an obligation which rests primarily upon another. The surety's liability is an accessory one. Hence the Section has no application unless the person sought to be proceeded against has taken upon himself the liability of another.¹ The liability need not be that of either the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder but it may be the liability of an officer of the Court.² Thus, this Section applies to the enforcement of the liability of a

The security under this Section is intended to be given to some named officer or other individual and not to be a mere undertaking to the Court. The Court is not a juridical person. It cannot be sued. It cannot take property and as it cannot take property it cannot assign it. Where therefore a security bond is executed in favour of the Court, this Section has no application. But independently of this Section it can be enforced by an order on an application to which the sureties are parties that the properties be sold unless, before a day named, the sureties find the money.⁴

In the undermentioned case⁵ a security bond was executed in favour of a certificate officer under the Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act in respect of a debt due by a certificate debtor to a certificate holder. It was held that the certificate officer who was deemed to be a Court under Section 57 of the Act, could not maintain a suit on the surety bond, and that the certificate holder as the beneficiary under the bond could sue on it.

See also Note 11 infra.

2c. "Has become liable as surety." —

Where A was appointed commissioner to attach certain moveable property and keep it in custody and he after looking after the shop and locks, it was held that the watchmen could not be said to have become liable as sureties and that this Section did not apply.⁶

3. Security for the performance of any decree. —

Old Section 253 used the words "wherever a person has before the passing of a decree in an original suit become liable as a surety," etc. Hence it did not apply to securities given subsequent to the passing of a decree except when the bond expressly stipulated for its enforcement for a party to the suit and so the objection that the surety was not a surety for a party was groundless. But the case does not decide the question whether this Section will not apply unless the surety is a surety for a party to the suit.)

(16) AIR 1916 Mad 521 (522): 39 Mad 584. (The remark in this decision that the Section contemplates proceedings against a third party who has given an undertaking for the due discharge of the obligations resting upon a party to the suit only means that the Section does not apply to the enforcement of the liability of the person on whom the primary responsibility lies.)

right of making a person, not a party to a pending suit, amenable to the jurisdiction of the Court in execution proceedings and that it therefore could not be applied to proceedings other than suits. See Section 141 Note 7, ante.

Where the judgment-debtor deposited the decree amount into Court and the next friend of the minor decree-holder applied for withdrawing the money and for re-depositing it in the form of Government Promissory Notes, it was held that such an application was a "proceeding consequent on the suit" and that a surety for such re-deposit can be proceeded against under this Section.⁴

7. "The decree or order may be executed against him."— This Section provides for the enforcement of the surety's liability by execution against the surety of the decree or order in connexion with which the security was given. But the Court is not bound to issue execution against the surety. It has a discretion to refuse such execution.¹ If execution is issued the Court cannot declare a forfeiture in favour of the Government but the security money should be paid to the decree-holder.² The decree-holder must apply it towards the satisfaction of his decree and is not entitled to it over and above the decree amount as a solatium for delay brought about in the execution of his decree.³

The mere fact that the applicant for execution mentions the breach of one condition in the security bond as having given him the right to apply for execution does not disentitle the Court from ordering execution if in the course of the proceedings it finds that some other condition has been broken.⁴

The legality of the order for security cannot be questioned by the surety in the execution proceedings against him under this Section.⁵

The Court has no power under the Section to order the refund of moneys deposited as security. But refund can be ordered under Section 151.⁶

8. "To the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable."— The word "personally" has been newly added in the present Section. Under the former Section there was a conflict of opinion as to whether the Section applied to cases where the surety had not undertaken a personal liability but had merely given a charge on his property.¹ Under the present Section it is clear that it applies only where the surety has rendered himself personally liable.² If therefore a security bond were given by the Government on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council, Section 145 would not apply to the case, as the Secretary of State would not be personally liable under the bond.³ For the same reason, where a surety bond does not create a personal liability but merely creates a charge or mortgage on the surety's property, it cannot be enforced by proceedings under this Section.⁴ Where, however, the charge on the surety's property is declared by the decree itself, the liability can be enforced by executing the

- (Per Division Bench— Bond creating both per-

decree and no suit on the mortgage is necessary.⁵ The reason is that in such a case the surety is virtually in the position of a judgment-debtor.⁶

Where the surety makes himself personally liable and, in addition, charges his property, it is only the personal liability that can be enforced under this Section.⁷ The decree-holder may give up the mortgage and enforce the personal liability of the surety by attachment and sale of the property charged.⁸ O. 34 R. 14 does not preclude such a course because there is no decree for the payment of money against the surety in such cases as required by that Rule.⁹ But where the surety has transferred his equity of redemption to another person, his personal liability cannot be enforced by the sale of the mortgaged property, because it no longer belongs to him. In such a case the property can only be brought to sale by a suit on the mortgage.¹⁰

Where a judgment-debtor himself gives his property as security, the property can be sold in execution under Section 47.¹¹

A surety for costs payable by a party to a suit is personally liable for the costs and the mere fact that he deposits a certain amount by way of security does not exclude his personal liability.¹²

The surety's liability is co-extensive with that of the judgment-debtor and he is jointly and severally liable with the judgment-debtor for the decree amount. A decree against the principal can, in fact, be treated as a decree against him.¹³ Hence, the party for whose benefit security has been given is not bound to execute the decree against the judgment-debtor before proceeding against the surety,¹⁴ except where the decree otherwise provides.¹⁵ Within the limits prescribed by the security bond, the

Where a person gives security for production of property in one suit, he cannot be called upon to produce it in another.¹⁴ As regards the liability and discharge of a surety under Section 55 (4), see Note 12 to Section 55, ante, and the undermentioned cases.¹⁵

Section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act requires that a defendant applying to set aside an ex parte decree should furnish security for the performance of the decree. It has been held that the security only applies to the ex parte decree itself in case the application should fail. Hence, where the ex parte decree is set aside the surety is discharged and he is not liable in respect of the decree that may be passed subsequently.¹⁶

A surety for the appearance of judgment-debtor is discharged if the judgment-debtor is in jail for a criminal offence and cannot be produced on the required date.¹⁷ A surety for the appearance of the judgment-debtor if a particular pending proceeding is dismissed, is discharged if on the dismissal of such proceeding the judgment-debtor surrenders himself before the Court.¹⁸ Where a judgment-debtor is released on security, but owing to the default of the decree-holder the execution petition is dismissed and the surety discharged, the liability is not automatically revived by the mere restoration of the execution petition.¹⁹ It has been held in Rangoon²⁰ that where the surety has bound himself to make the judgment-debtor pay the decree amount on a specified date or, in default, to pay it himself, the judgment-debtor's death before the prescribed date does not end the surety's liability. This view has, however, been dissented from in the undermentioned case.²¹ A surety under O. 38 R. 5 (attachment before judgment) is not discharged by the death of the defendant pending the suit where the cause of action survives against the legal representative and the legal representative is brought on the record.²² But where a person who is not the legal representative is brought on the record and a decree is passed against the estate of the deceased, neither the legal representative nor the surety is bound by the decree.²³

The surety's liability being co-extensive with that of the principal debtor, the extinction or diminution of the latter's liability operates as a discharge of the surety to a corresponding extent.²⁴ Conversely, a surety is bound as long as the judgment-debtor is bound. Hence, when the decree is sought to be executed against the surety, no uncertified

payment by the judgment-debtor can be recognized by the executing Court²⁵ [O. 21, R. 2 (3)]. The Sind Court has expressed a contrary view on this point.²⁶

Where the Court varies the terms of the security bond without the surety's consent, the surety is discharged.²⁷ But where the variation is obviously for the benefit of the surety, he is not discharged.²⁸ Similarly, if the Court in whose favour the surety bond is executed is not in the least responsible for the change in the situation of the surety, the surety is not entitled to ask the Court to relieve him of his obligation under the bond on the ground that the decree-holder has arrived at a certain arrangement with the debtor.²⁹

Is the surety discharged by the failure of the creditor to sue the principal debtor within the period of limitation? Yes, according to Allahabad,³⁰ Rangoon³¹ and Nagpur.³² No, according to Bombay,³³ Calcutta³⁴ and Madras.³⁵ The conflict is due to this reason. Under Section 134, Contract Act, any omission of the creditor, the legal consequence of which is the discharge of the principal debtor, operates as a discharge of the surety. Under Section 137 the mere forbearance of the creditor to sue the principal debtor does not discharge the surety. According to the first group of Courts mentioned above, Section 134 is the Section applicable to such cases; while according to second group it is Section 137. In a recent decision of the Allahabad High Court³⁶ it has been held that Section 134 of the Contract Act does not apply to a security bond executed in favour of the Court.

A contract³⁷ between the creditor and principal debtor, by which the creditor promises to give time to,³⁸ or not to sue,³⁹ the principal debtor, discharges the surety.

5 unless the surety assents to such contract.⁴⁰ Is the surety under this Section discharged
a by the creditor entering into a compromise with the principal debtor? The answer to this question depends on the terms of the security bond.⁴¹

Under Sections 142 and 143 of the Contract Act, 1872, a security which the creditor has obtained by misrepresentation or silence as to material circumstances is invalid.⁴² A surety is discharged by the failure of the consideration for his bond.⁴³ Where the surety has not performed his obligation because the decree-holder has expressly dispensed with its performance, the surety is not liable to be proceeded against, under his bond.⁴⁴ Where a surety dies after the accrual of his liability under the bond, the liability can be enforced against his legal representatives to the extent of his estate in their hands.⁴⁵ Where the surety is not otherwise discharged from his liability the Court has no power to make an order for his discharge⁴⁶ except in the case provided for by O. 38 R. 3 (arrest before judgment).⁴⁷ The High Court of Allahabad has, however, held in the undermentioned case⁴⁸ that the Court to which a guarantee is given has power in a proper case to exonerate the surety from all future transactions.

A surety may be precluded by estoppel⁴⁹ or res judicata,⁵⁰ from disputing his liability under the bond.

Where a bond is given to the Court, the liability of the surety cannot be determined by the surety by giving notice as in the case of a continuing guarantee.⁵¹

Where security for the appearance of a judgment-debtor in the course of certain execution proceedings has been given, the termination of such proceedings will not absolve the surety from a liability already incurred by him before such termination.⁵²

9a. Surety, if can recover sum forfeited. — Where a man stands surety for the appearance of another, he should take every precaution to ensure the carrying out of his undertaking and he cannot be allowed on grounds of public policy to recover any sum forfeited under the bond from the principal or from any one else; for, if he is so allowed, it would only tend to render the surety callous and the whole object of demanding the bond would be defeated.¹

10. Form of surety bond. — A surety bond may be in favour of the Court or the decree-holder. No particular form is necessary.¹ To make the Section applicable, it is not necessary that the surety's liability must have accrued upon an application presented to the Court or a security bond filed in the proceedings.² According to the High Court of Madras,³ however, the Section does not apply to surety bonds executed outside Court.

It has been held that a surety bond charging immovable property with a sum exceeding Rs. 100 is compulsorily registrable, and is inadmissible in evidence without registration.⁴

10a. Enforceability of surety bond in execution apart from the Section. — A security can be enforced in execution under the inherent powers of the Court apart from the provisions of this Section.¹

11. Maintainability of separate suit by or against the surety. — As has been seen in Note 63 to Section 9 ante, a regular suit is not barred by the fact that a summary and concurrent remedy is also provided for. It was held under the old Section that the summary remedy under it was additional and not exclusive, and therefore it did not bar a regular suit to enforce the security.¹ The present Section provides that the surety "shall, for the purposes of appeal, be deemed a party within the meaning of Section 47." This does not make the surety a party to the suit for all purposes.² He is a party only for the limited purpose of appeal. Hence, a suit to enforce the security is not barred under the present Section also.³ Similarly, a suit by the surety to negative

his liability is not barred.⁴ But a suit for injunction restraining the executing Court from executing the decree against the surety cannot be maintained.⁵

Until an application is made for execution against the surety he does not become a "party". Hence, he cannot apply to the executing Court for cancellation of his bond.⁶ Nor will the rejection of such application made by him, where he makes one, constitute res judicata.⁷ But when it is sought to enforce the decree against him, he becomes a "party" and his objections therefore have to be determined in the proceedings and he cannot be compelled to file a separate suit to vindicate his objections.⁸ For the same reason, his omission to raise any objection in proceedings against him under this Section will make the decision as to his liability res judicata and he cannot dispute it afterwards.⁹

A surety cannot have a sale set aside by separate suit, where it is vitiated only by irregularities and not for want of jurisdiction.¹⁰

This was also the law under the old Code.³ It has been held by the High Court of Madras that even where Section 145 does not apply, but the surety bond is enforced without recourse to suit in the manner mentioned by the Privy Council in A. But, until an application is filed for execution against a surety under this Section, he is not a *party*⁵ and hence an order discharging him before such application is made is not appealable.⁶

This Section does not apply to an order for refund of security. Such refund can be ordered only under Section 151. Hence no appeal lies from an order for refund of security.⁷

13. Limitation. — The general trend of opinion is that an application for execution against a surety is governed by Article 182 of the Limitation Act, whether the security was given before or after the decree.¹ The Chief Court of Oudh has, however, held that where security is given after decree, the application does not fall within any of the clauses of Article 182 of the Limitation Act and is therefore governed by Article 181 of that Act,² though in a later decision the same Court has proceeded on the footing of the applicability of Article 182 to such cases.³ Even among the High Courts which hold that Article 182 applies, there is a difference of opinion as to whether the application is governed by Explanation I to that Article or clause (5) of that Article. According to the High Courts of Calcutta,⁴ Lahore⁵ and Patna,⁶ where security is given after the passing of the decree, the decree cannot be said to have been "jointly passed" against the judgment-debtor and the surety within the meaning of Explanation 1 to Article 182 and that an application for execution filed against the judgment-debtor alone or the surety alone does not save limitation against the other. The same view has been expressed by the High Courts of Bombay⁷ and Rangoon⁸ even when the security is given in the suit before the passing of the decree. The High Court of Allahabad, while agreeing that the decree passed in such cases is not a joint decree, nevertheless holds that an application against the one will save limitation against the other under clause (5) of Article 182.⁹ The Chief Court of Oudh has also held the same view in the undermentioned case.¹⁰

Where an appeal is preferred against a decree for the performance of which security has been given, limitation for an application to execute the decree against the surety under this Section is three years from the date of the appellate decree under clause (2) of Article 182 of the Limitation Act.¹¹

As to whether a decree-holder who has allowed his remedy against the judgment-debtor to become time-barred is entitled to proceed against the surety, see Note 9 above.

14. Notice to surety. — Notice to the surety is a condition precedent to the validity of the proceedings against him under this Section.¹ The surety may, however,

146. [New.] Save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any law for the time being in force, where any proceeding may be taken or application made by or against any person, then the proceeding may be taken or the application may be made by or against any person claiming under him.

3. A files a suit for partition against B, C and D, and pending the suit mortgages his share to X. A thereafter dies leaving his widow. X applies to be impleaded as co-plaintiff or supplemental defendant. The application is not maintainable. The reason is that O. 22 R. 10 which governs such cases is not applicable inasmuch as there is no devolution or assignment absolutely of the plaintiff's interest on X, but only a derivative interest in the subject-matter. Section 146 cannot also be applied because, there is a specific provision governing such cases and a party cannot be allowed to avoid the conditions of such provision by purporting to proceed under the general provision.³

Similarly, O. 21 R. 16 precludes any one who is not a decree-holder or transferee of the decree by assignment in writing or by operation of law from applying to execute the decree. (See Note 4.)

See also the undermentioned decision.⁴

4. Application for execution by or against representatives. — Order 21 Rule 16 makes it clear that besides the decree-holder any person to whom the decree has been transferred by assignment in writing or by operation of law, may execute the decree. Section 146 cannot be read as extending the scope of O. 21 R. 16 as the former is expressly made subject to the other provisions of the Code. Hence, a transferee of property which is the subject-matter of a suit¹ or which is covered by a decree² is not entitled to apply for the execution of a decree in favour of the transferor, although he may be a person "claiming under" the decree-holder within the meaning of this Section.³ Further, such a transferee is not a transferee of the decree within the meaning of O. 21 R. 16.⁴

The expression "transferee" in Order 21 Rule 16 is however not confined to a transferee of the whole decree, but includes a transferee of a portion of the decree and hence such a person can apply to execute the decree.⁵

A decree may be executed against the property in the hands of a transferee thereof pending the suit.⁶

Where a decree-holder dies during the pendency of an execution application, his legal representatives may be substituted in the execution application and be allowed to continue the execution proceedings without a fresh application for execution.⁷ The same principle applies where the execution has to proceed against the legal representatives of a judgment-debtor who dies during the pendency of an execution application.⁸ It has also been held that an application by the legal representative of the decree-holder under O. 21 R. 16, in a pending execution application, is only a continuation of prior proceedings and not a fresh application for the purposes of Section 48 of the Code.⁹ (For fuller discussion, see O. 22 R. 12 Note 1.)

4. ('35) AIR 1935 Cal 738 (739). (S. 73 permits rateable distribution only when decrees are against the same judgment-debtor. S. 146 cannot enlarge its scope as it is expressly made subject to the other provisions of the Code. By reason of S. 146 the words 'passed against the same judgment-debtor' in S. 73 cannot be read as 'passed against the same judgment-debtor or the legal representative of the same judgment-debtor'.)

5. Proceeding or application. — An appeal is a “proceeding” contemplated by the Section. Hence a person claiming under a party to the suit may prefer an appeal from the decree in the suit although he was not himself a party to the suit.¹

Applications under O. 21 R. 2,² or under O. 21 R. 94,³ or under O. 21 R. 95 and 98,⁴ or under O. 34 R. 5,⁵ are all examples of applications contemplated by the Section.

As to when a person can be said to “claim under” another, see Note 8 below.

6. Appeal. — See Note 5 above.

7. Application to set aside ex parte decree. — As has been observed in Note 2 above, there was a conflict of decisions under the old Code as to whether the legal representative of a defendant against whom an ex parte decree had been passed, could apply to set it aside. The present Section now makes it clear that such an application is maintainable.¹

8. “Claiming under,” meaning of. — A person “claiming under” a party to a litigation is one who —

- (1) has succeeded to the position of the latter in the litigation,¹ or

enough if B has acquired from A an interest in the property concerned in the litigation, subsequently to the commencement thereof]:

(4) A sues B to establish his right to certain property. While the suit is pending, B mortgages the property to C. The suit is decreed against B. B does not appeal from the decree. C, as a person claiming under B, may appeal from the decree.⁸ If, in the above case, B had mortgaged the property to C, prior to the institution of the suit, C would not be a person claiming under B. This is shown by the next illustration.

(5) A, a mortgagee of immovable property, sues B, the mortgagor, for the enforcement of the mortgage. Prior to the suit, B has granted to C, a puisne mortgage of the property. C is not made a party to the suit. An ex parte decree is passed against B in the suit. C cannot apply to set aside the ex parte decree as a person claiming under B, because C's interest was not acquired subsequently to the institution of the suit but was acquired before.⁹

(6) A, a member of a Hindu joint family, obtains a preliminary decree for partition of his share of the family property. Then he transfers his rights in the family property to B. B takes no steps to be impleaded in the suit, but after the final decree, applies to execute it as a person claiming under A. B is not entitled to do so.¹⁰ The reason is that B claimed under A only in respect of the preliminary decree which gave A merely an unspecified share in the family property. The right to secure separate possession granted by the final decree did not vest in A himself on the date of the transfer and could not pass to B under the transfer. B cannot therefore be said to "claim under" A in respect of that right which alone would enable him to execute the decree.

(7) A sues B and attaches before judgment, a debt due to B from C. The suit is decreed in A's favour. Upon this, under O. 38 R. 11, A's attachment before judgment ripens into attachment in execution. Then B sues C and obtains a decree on the debt. A does not attach this decree but applies for its execution as a person claiming under B. It was held by Venkatasubba Rao, J., that A was entitled to do so and by Reilly, J., that he was not.¹¹ It is respectfully submitted that the view of Reilly, J., is correct. A was neither the legal representative of B nor the assignee of B's decree. Hence, he had not succeeded to B's position as a decree-holder. Nor can he be said to have acquired any interest in the subject-matter of the suit inasmuch as his attachment cannot be said to create any interest in it; and even if it does, it cannot be said to have been acquired subsequently to the institution of B's suit, because the attachment was complete before B filed his suit. Under O. 21 R. 53 (3), a decree-holder, who attaches another decree of the nature specified in the said Rule, becomes a representative of the holder of the latter decree for the purposes of execution.¹²

(8) Under O. 21 R. 53, where A attaches in execution of his decree against B, a decree obtained by B against C, A becomes the representative of B. But A becomes the representative of B only for the limited purpose of executing the decree against C. B has no right to adjust the attached decree and release C from his liability under the decree.¹³

It has been held that a Hindu co-parcener is not a person 'claiming under' the manager of the joint family against whom a suit is filed.¹⁴

9. Legal representative need not be brought on the record in order to maintain an application under this Section. — To entitle a person to take a proceeding under Section 146 as a person claiming under a party to a litigation, it is not necessary that he should have been brought on the record as such.¹ Again, where A, B, C and D are entitled as persons claiming under E to make an application, and A alone presents the application within limitation, B, C and D being brought on the record subsequently, the presentation of the application by A alone is not invalid in view of this Section though it may be defective and the Court may not proceed with it.²

147. [New.] In all suits to which any person under disability is a party, any consent or agreement, as to any proceeding shall, if given or made with the express leave of the Court by the next friend or guardian for the suit, have the same force and effect as if such person were under no disability and had given such consent or made such agreement.

[R. S. C., Order 16 Rule 21. See Order 32.]

Synopsis

1. Legislative changes.
2. Scope of the Section.
3. "Person under disability."
4. "As to any proceeding."
5. Leave must be express.

1. Legislative changes. — This Section is new. It is based on O. 16 R. 21 of the Rules of the Supreme Court. It has not made any substantive alteration in the law.

2. Scope of the Section. — Order 32 Rule 7 provides that a minor's guardian for suit or next friend shall not enter into any compromise or agreement with reference to the suit without the leave of the Court expressly recorded in the proceedings. The present Section enacts the substantive rule that a minor shall be bound by a compromise entered into by his guardian in the prescribed manner.

3. "Person under disability." — The Section applies to consent or agreement given or made on behalf of a person who is deemed incapable of prosecuting or defending a suit personally, such as a minor or a lunatic. See Order 32 and compare also Contract Act, Section 11.

4. "As to any proceeding." — The Section does not apply to an agreement merely relating to the conduct of a suit, e. g., an agreement that an issue in a suit (not the suit itself) should be determined by the oath of the defendant.¹ See the Indian Oaths Act, Section 11. Such an agreement entered into by a guardian or a next friend prescribed or allowed by the Code, it may be extended by the Court from time to time.¹ There are, however, two important exceptions to this general rule —

(1) Where the Court ceases to have jurisdiction over the matter, after the order granting the period is passed. Thus, where a Court orders a plaint to be returned under O. 7 R. 10 for presentation to the proper Court and in that order a period is fixed within which such presentation is to be made, the period cannot be extended, as, after the order for return, the Court has no jurisdiction over the matter.² Similarly, where the order fixing time finally disposes of the matter and the Court has no longer seisin of the matter, the time fixed cannot be enlarged.³ Thus, where an order provides that a suit dismissed for default should be restored to the file on condition that the plaintiff pays the costs of the opposite party on or before a particular date and directs that in case of default, the application for restoration is to stand dismissed, the time cannot be enlarged under this Section.⁴

(2) Where a period is fixed or granted by a decree.⁵

5. See the next paragraph in the Notes.

The second exception above noted is based upon another general rule which is enacted in O. 20 R. 3, that when once a decree has been signed it shall not afterwards be altered or added to save as provided by Section 152 or on review. Section 148 cannot be allowed to operate so as to nullify this rule and it, therefore, follows that where a period is fixed or granted by a decree it cannot be extended by the Court,⁶ though the decree itself may be varied or reversed by the Appellate Court under O. 41 R. 32 by granting a different period to that fixed by the lower Court.⁷ There has been, however, a conflict of decisions on the point due to the general principle abovementioned not being always kept in view. It was held by the Patna High Court in the undermentioned case⁸ that where time is fixed for payment in a pre-emption decree, it could be extended by the Court. The decision was based simply on S. 148 without any reference to O. 20 R. 3. The correctness of the decision was, however, doubted in a later case⁹ of the same High Court. The High Courts of Madras,¹⁰ Calcutta¹¹ and Rangoon¹² have held that where a decree for specific performance of a contract is passed on condition of a party paying a certain sum by a certain date, the Court could extend the time. The decisions rest their view on the provisions of Section 35(c) of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, and on the view that a decree for specific performance of a contract on certain conditions is in the nature of a preliminary decree, the original Court keeping control over the action and having full powers to make any just and necessary orders therein including extension of the time fixed by the decree. The Patna High Court¹³ and the Oudh Chief Court¹⁴ hold that the time fixed, even in a decree for specific performance, cannot be extended by the Court under Section 148.

The rule that time granted by a decree cannot be extended by the Court has also got an exception and that is furnished by Order 34 Rules 2, 4 and 7 (as amended by Act XXI of 1929) of the Code. Under those provisions the time fixed by a preliminary decree for sale, redemption or foreclosure may, at any time, before the passing of the final decree, be extended by the Court from time to time. For another exception to the rule, see Note 3 below.

Where a plaintiff in whose favour a conditional decree is passed, neither fulfils the condition within the time allowed nor applies for extension of time, he cannot execute the decree.¹⁵

3. Extension of time fixed by consent decree. — Another exception to the rule that time fixed by a decree cannot be extended by the Court under Section 148 is furnished by consent decrees. It has been held in the undermentioned cases¹ that a Court can extend the time fixed in a consent decree for the doing of an act directed thereby, where time is not of the essence of the contract of compromise. The reason is that a consent decree cannot have greater validity than the compromise on which it is based, and hence, the Court can, in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction, grant such relief against forfeiture as it might have granted if there had been no consent decree and a suit had been instituted to enforce the compromise. The Allahabad,² Lahore³ and Patna⁴ High Courts and the Oudh Chief Court⁵ have held that the general rule holds good even in the case of consent decrees and that, therefore, the time fixed by the decree could not be extended.

As to the power of the Court to extend the time fixed for payment of the mortgage money under a compromise decree in a suit to enforce or redeem a mortgage, see Notes to Order 34 Rules 2, 4 and 7.

4. Extension of time fixed by award. — A valid award is final and conclusive as between the parties to it and a Court cannot interfere with any portion of it. Hence, the Court cannot extend the time fixed by an award.¹ It may also be noted that time fixed by an award is not time fixed by a Court and hence Section 148 does not apply to it. (See Note 1 above.)

5. "Act prescribed or allowed by this Code." — The Section applies only where time is fixed for doing an act prescribed or allowed by the Code.¹ Where a period is fixed by the Court to do a particular act under its inherent powers, it is an act allowed by Section 151 of this Code and therefore this Section will apply to such a case.² "Code" includes not only the body of the Code but also the Schedules and the Rules made under Section 122 or Section 125 [see Section 2 (18)]. See, for instance, the following provisions :—

- (1) Section 55 (4). — Security for the production of the judgment-debtor within the time fixed by Court.³
- (2) Section 143. — Time for payment of postage.

4. ('09) 32 Mad 305 (311) (FB).

The Section does not apply when time is fixed for doing an act not prescribed or allowed by the Code.⁵

But in so far as the provisions of the Code are made applicable to proceedings under any other Act, the Section applies to steps to be taken under such Act. Thus, according to the High Courts of Madras, Lahore and Nagpur, an Insolvency Court can extend the time fixed for applying for discharge, even after the time originally fixed has expired,⁶ though the High Courts of Rangoon and Patna have taken a contrary view.⁷ Further, even without recourse to Section 148 it may be possible to construe a particular Section in such a way as to admit of an extension of the time fixed by the Court. Thus, it was held under the former Code that a Court could extend the time fixed for security for costs of appeal under S. 549 (now O. 41 R. 10),⁸ or for paying deficit court-fee under Section 54 (now O. 7 R. 11).⁹ On similar reasoning, it has been held that a Court can extend the time fixed for payment of deficit court-fee under the Court-fees Act, Section 10 clause (2)¹⁰ or Section 11,¹¹ or for deposit of one-fifth of the purchase-money in a suit for pre-emption under Section 22 (4) of the Punjab Pro-emption Act.¹² Paragraph 8 of Schedule II expressly confers on the Court the power to extend the time fixed for making an award, even after the expiry of the period originally fixed.¹³ Hence, there is no necessity for resort to Section 148 for extension of time in such a case.

See also the undermentioned case.¹⁴

6. Discretion of Court. — The power to enlarge time under this Section is discretionary.¹ The Appellate Court should not interfere with the discretion of a Court under Section 148 except on very strong grounds.² A Court passing orders for extension of time should be taken, on the record as it stands, to have exercised its discretion as prosecution,⁹ or is withdrawn,¹⁰ or summarily dismissed under O. 41 R. 11,¹¹ there is no decree of the Appellate Court in which the lower Court's decree may be said to have merged, and hence the period fixed does not get a fresh start from the decree of the Appellate Court.

Where a decree awarding future mesne profits is confirmed in appeal, the three years' period under O. 20 R. 12 runs from the appellate decree.¹² The reason is that the term "decree" in O. 20 R. 12 refers to the executable decree in a case, and where an appeal is preferred against a decree, the only executable decree is that of the Appellate Court, whether it affirms, reverses or modifies the lower Court's decree. See also Note 5 to O. 34 R. 3, infra.

10. Court to which application for extension should be made. — Where an appeal has been preferred from a decree, the only Court that can extend the time fixed by it, assuming that the case is one in which time can be extended, is the Appellate Court.¹ A fortiori the lower Court has no jurisdiction to extend the time fixed in an appellate decree.² But it has been held by the Rangoon High Court that where an appeal has been dismissed, the trial Court has power to enlarge the time fixed by the order appealed from.³ See also the undermentioned case.⁴

11. Appeal. — No appeal lies from an order under this Section as it is neither a decree nor an appealable order under Section 104.¹

After a final decree, the Court cannot extend the time fixed by it under S. 148. Hence, if the Court does extend the time it should be deemed to be acting not under Section 148 but under Section 47, and its order is therefore appealable as a decree.²

12. Revision. — An order under this Section is not appealable but is open to revision provided the conditions of Section 115 are satisfied.¹ See Note 11 above. But

5. "Discretion of Court." — There are certain cases in which the Court is bound to give some time for making up the deficient court-fee. Thus under O. 7 R. 11 (c) where a plaint is insufficiently stamped, the Court is bound to grant some time to supply the deficient court-fee.¹ In all other cases the Court has a discretion under the Section to allow the court-fee to be paid at any stage. The High Courts of Calcutta,² Lahore³ and Patna⁴ and the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court⁵ have held that this discretion cannot be exercised in favour of a party who has not been bona fide, that is, who is not under any honest mistake or doubt or who has not made an honest attempt to comply with the law. Mere poverty or ignorance is not a ground for indulgence under the Section.⁶ The reason is that where an appeal is not filed in time with a proper court-fee, the appeal becomes barred and the respondent gets a valuable right. The Court should not, therefore, exercise its discretion under this Section to his prejudice except where sufficient grounds exist for the non-payment of the full court-fee in the first instance. The Bombay High Court⁷ has, on the other hand, held that the discretion is not limited to cases where the party is under a bona fide misunderstanding of the law as to valuation. This view is based on the fact that the present Section omits the provision which occurred in Section 582A of the old Code restricting the exercise of discretion to cases where the insufficiency of the stamp is caused by mistake on the part of the appellant or applicant. It has been held in a recent Full Bench decision of the Lahore High Court that the discretion conferred on the Court by this Section is normally expected to be exercised in favour of the litigant except in cases of contumacy or positive mala fides or reasons of a similar kind.⁸ The Peshawar Judicial Commissioner's Court⁹ also has held that where the failure to pay the requisite court-fee is due to a bona fide mistake, the Court can allow the deficiency to be made up under this Section.

Where a party has been contesting with some show of justification the correctness of the order requiring him to pay an enhanced court-fee, he should be allowed reasonable time in which to pay the deficiency on an adverse order being finally passed against him.¹⁰

6. Whole or any part of any fee. — The discretion under Section 149 applies not only where the court-fee paid is not sufficient but also where no court-fee has been paid at all.¹ It has been held by the Madras High Court that Section 149 contemplates cases in which payment of duty is insufficient ab initio. Hence, it does not apply where a plaintiff is allowed to sue on the basis of a tentative valuation, as in suits for accounts or mesne profits, and, on a decree for a higher amount being passed, is required under Court-fees Act, Section 11, to pay additional court-fees.² It is however open to a Court on the construction of the Court-fees Act, Section 11, itself to enlarge the period fixed for payment of additional court-fee under that Section.³

As to the right of an appellant in an insufficiently stamped appeal to be heard on the proportionate part of his claim in appeal, see the undermentioned cases.⁴

7. "At any stage." — Under the former Code it was held by the High Courts of Bombay,¹ Calcutta² and Madras,³ the Chief Courts of the Punjab⁴ and Lower Burma⁵ that where the deficiency in court-fee is supplied after the period of limitation but within the time allowed by the Court, the suit or appeal was not barred by limitation. The reason given was that the suit or appeal should be deemed to be instituted on the date of the original presentation of the plaint or memorandum of appeal and not on the date on which the deficit court-fee was made up. The Allahabad High Court did not accept this view.⁶ According to that Court, the presentation of an insufficiently stamped plaint or memorandum of appeal was not a valid presentation, and the suit or appeal could be deemed to be instituted only when the full court-fee was paid. But, as has been seen in Note 1 above, in the case of appeals and applications for review a different rule was provided by Section 582A which was introduced into the Code by Act IV of 1892.⁷ The Section superseded the undermentioned decisions which held that a Court could not allow deficient court-fee on an appeal⁸ or an application for review⁹ to be made good after the expiry of limitation unless the memorandum of appeal or application for review had been received through the mistake of the Court or of an officer thereof. The principle embodied in the Section was extended to plaints in the Full Bench case of Hari Ram v. Akbar Hussain.¹⁰ The learned Judges in that case relied upon Section 28 of the Court-fees Act which enables deficit court-fees to be made up where insufficiently stamped documents have been received or filed through mistake or inadvertence. Their Lordships interpreted the expression "mistake or inadvertence" in Section 28 so as to include the mistake not only of the Court or its officers but also of the party. The present Section gives legislative effect to this view and enables a defective document to be retrospectively validated at any stage if the insufficiency of the stamp is subsequently made up within the time allowed by the Court.¹¹

POWER TO MAKE UP DEFICIENCY OF COURT-FEES

The Court can also enlarge the time even after the lapse of the period originally by it.¹² (See Section 148.)

Deficit court-fees on a plaint may be allowed to be made good even in appeal.¹³ it is desirable that in such cases the matter is disposed of at the earliest possible moment after the deficit is discovered.¹⁴

As to the power of a Court to extend time for payment of court-fees fixed by own decree, see Note 2 to Section 148.

Where no time is fixed in the decree for the payment of the court-fee which is payable under it, the executing Court can allow time for such payment.¹⁵ Where a decree is passed on condition that a certain court-fee is deposited and the decree-holder deposits the same after three years and the Court accepts it, it cannot be said that execution is barred by limitation inasmuch as the decree is complete only when the court-fee is deposited and limitation cannot begin to run under Article 182 of the Limitation Act until there is a decree capable of execution.¹⁶

8. Power of Appellate or Revisional Court to interfere with discretion of the lower Court.—An Appellate Court should not interfere with discretion of the lower Court under the Section except on very strong grounds.¹ Where a Judge has allowed deficient court-fee to be made up under this Section, he must taken, on the record as it stands, to have exercised his discretion in the matter it is not open to the Appellate Court to go into the question as to whether he exercised his discretion.² Nor is it open even for the Judge while granting time for the payment of court-fee to be made up under this Section, he must taken, on the record as it stands, to have exercised his discretion in the matter it is not open to the Appellate Court to go into the question as to whether he exercised his discretion.² Nor is it open even for the Judge while granting time for the payment of court-fee to be made up under this Section, he must taken, on the record as it stands, to have exercised his discretion in the matter it is not open to the Appellate Court to go into the question as to whether he exercised his discretion.²

Court should presume that exercise of discretion by the Court is in accordance with the maxim omni esse acta.
[See (‘38) AIR 1938 Nag 3 (3). (Where the question whether there was failure to pay the court-fee within the proper time but within a reasonable time was raised, the Court was not unreasonable in allowing

of deficit court-fee to leave open the question of limitation.³ But where a Judge refuses to allow a party to make up deficient court-fee under this Section, there must be something to show that he did exercise his discretion in the matter.⁴ In a recent Special Bench decision of the Patna High Court⁵ it has been held that where the lower Court has exercised its discretion under this Section in an outrageous fashion, the aggrieved party must immediately move the High Court in revision and if he does not do so, he cannot afterwards impeach the order of the Court in the appeal from the final decision. (It may, however, be noted that there is a conflict of decisions as to the power of the High Court to interfere in revision with interlocutory orders: see Section 115 Note 5.)

9. Complaints and memoranda of appeals. — A person is not entitled, as a matter of right, to make up deficient court-fee under this Section. It is entirely left to the discretion of the Court to allow him to do so or not. But in a case of a plaint insufficiently stamped, the Court is bound under O. 7 R. 11 to allow some time to make up the deficiency, provided the plaint has been presented within the period of limitation.¹ Does the same rule apply to appeals? On this point there is a conflict of decisions. See Note 6 to O. 7 R. 11 for a full discussion of the subject.

10. Application for leave to sue or appeal as pauper. — (1) Where an application for leave to sue or appeal as a pauper is rejected, can the Court allow the court-fees to be paid under the present Section so as to treat the suit or appeal as filed on the date of the filing of the pauper application and not on the date on which the court-fee is paid?

(2) Has the Court power to convert an application for leave to sue or appeal as a pauper into a suit or appeal and by allowing time for the payment of court-fees on such suit or appeal under this Section treat the same as filed on the date on which the application for leave was made?

For a discussion of these questions, see Notes to O. 33 R. 7 and O. 44 R. 1.

11. Conversion of proceedings. — When an application is made under Section 95 of the Code, the Court may allow it to be converted into a suit on payment of the requisite court-fee. In such a case, the suit will be deemed to be instituted when the application was made and not when the court-fee is paid.¹

[New.] Save as otherwise provided, where the business of any Court is transferred to any other Court, the Court to which the business is so transferred shall have the same powers and shall perform the same duties as those respectively conferred and imposed by or under this Code upon the Court from which the business was so transferred.

Synopsis

1. "Save as otherwise provided."
2. "Where the business of any Court is transferred to any other Court."
3. Abolition of Court.
4. Powers and duties of Court to which business is transferred.

1. "Save as otherwise provided." — The mere fact that the Court by which a certain power is to be exercised, is specified does not preclude any Court to which the business of the former Court is "transferred," from exercising the power under Section 150, unless it is expressly or impliedly provided that no Court other than the one specified can exercise the power. The following are some of the cases bearing upon this question —

Execution proceedings. — Section 38 provides that a decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it, or by the Court to which it is sent for execution. Section 37 defines what a "Court which passed the decree" includes. A decree is passed by a Court A. The business of Court A is transferred to Court B within the meaning of Section 150. But Court B does not come within any of the categories mentioned in Sections 37 and 38. Nevertheless Court B can execute the decree passed by Court A. The reason is that there is no express or implied exclusion of the competency of any Court not mentioned in Sections 37 and 38 to execute the decree.¹ As to whether a particular area concerned in a suit is transferred to another Court, see Note 5 to Section 37 and also Note 2 below.

Application to set aside ex parte decree. — Order 9 Rule 13 provides that an application to set aside an ex parte decree may be made to the Court by which the decree was passed. This does not mean that no other Court can set aside the ex parte decree. Hence, a Court to which the business of another Court is transferred under Section 150 can set aside the ex parte decree passed by the latter Court.²

Power to punish for disobedience of temporary injunction. — O. 39 R. 2 (2) empowers the "Court granting an injunction" to punish persons for disobeying the

as transfer of all the business, pending or otherwise, in that area to the transferee Court.⁵ Some of them also hold that the Court in which the suit or proceeding was instituted would at the same time continue to have jurisdiction thereon.⁶ This is an impossible position. As has been seen already, where a business is transferred from Court A to Court B, Court A has no longer that business before it and has no power to deal with it. If, on the other hand, Court A continues to have power over a particular business it cannot be said to have been transferred from it to another Court. For all the above reasons the decisions taking the second of the two views set forth above are not correct and have been overruled by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in the undermentioned case.⁷ The Allahabad High Court has held in the undermentioned case⁸ that the Section cannot be invoked in a case where there has only been a transfer of jurisdiction as to future business subject to an express reservation as regards pending cases. Thus, a Court in which a suit was pending at the time of the transfer has exclusive jurisdiction to entertain an application for restitution arising out of such a suit.

There is a conflict of decisions as to whether an assignment of business by the District Judge under the Civil Courts Act is a transfer of business within the meaning of Section 150. The Calcutta⁹ and Patna¹⁰ High Courts hold that it is not. The High Court of Madras¹¹ has, on the other hand, held dissenting from the Calcutta decision, that the word "transfer" is not inapplicable to a case where the District Judge fixes the jurisdiction of the Court under the Civil Courts Act, and transfers the whole of the business within the area to it.

3. Abolition of Court. — Where a Court is abolished, its proceedings can be continued by the Court which would have jurisdiction to entertain the suit if it was instituted at the time when the proceedings are sought to be continued.¹ (See Section 37 of the Code.) If a new Court is established in the place with the same jurisdiction as the old one, it can continue the proceedings² unless they have been transferred to some question and to reserve another for investigation, the Privy Council pointing out that it did not require any provision of the Code to authorise a Judge to do what in this matter was justice and for the advantage of the parties; to remand a suit in a case to which neither Section 562 nor Section 566 (1882) applies; to stay the drawing up of the Court's own orders or to suspend their operation, if the necessities of justice so require : to stay, apart from the question whether the case falls within Section 545, the carrying out of a preliminary order pending appeal; to stay proceedings in a lower Court pending appeal and to appoint temporary guardian of a minor upon such stay; to apply the principles of res judicata to cases not falling within Sections 13 and 14 of the Code (1882) and so forth."

In Nandkishore v. Ramgolum,¹¹ further instances were added, viz.—

"Punishing for contempt of Court committed when the Court is not sitting: deciding questions of jurisdiction though the Court is ultimately found not to have jurisdiction over the suit: directing a party who has applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council to pay costs on the dismissal of his application: amending decrees or orders: granting restitution in cases of reversal of execution sales and orders in execution proceedings: restraining by injunction a person from proceeding with a suit in the Small Cause Court: staying proceedings pursuant to its own order in view of an intended appeal; and treating an application for revision as an appeal and vice versa."

The Court has an inherent power under such circumstances to act according to justice, equity and good conscience¹² especially in India, where every Court is a Court of Equity as well as of Law.¹³

This Section does not confer any new powers on the Courts but only saves their inherent powers to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court.¹⁴ The object of enacting the Section is to show that the powers expressly conferred by the Code apply only so far as they go, but cannot restrict the scope of the Court's inherent powers to do complete and substantial justice¹⁵ for the administration of which alone Courts exist.¹⁶

The inherent powers of the Court being very wide and indefinable¹⁷ the limits of such jurisdiction should be carefully guarded and its exercise in an arbitrary and capricious manner effectively prevented.¹⁸ It has been seen that the inherent power of a Court is recognized only to meet those cases for which no provision is made by the Code. It follows, therefore, that where there are express provisions of law applicable to a particular case, there is no inherent power in the Court to override them.¹⁹ The words "nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect" do not mean that the Code stands repealed where a Court decides to exercise its inherent powers, for the inherent powers can be exercised only where there is no express provision of the Code.²⁰ Another limitation on the exercise of such power by the Court is that it must be consistent with sound general principles of law, and with the intention of the Legislature.²¹

The inherent powers of a Court under Section 151 can be exercised, as the Section itself indicates, only —

(1) for the ends of justice, or

(2) to prevent the abuse of the process of the Court.²²

2. Court cannot override express provisions of law. — It has been seen in Note 1 above that the inherent power of a Court exists only where there is no express provision of law applicable to the case.¹ Thus, where there is a specific prohibition of a

Where, however, there is a doubt or difficulty as to which provision will apply to a particular case, the inherent powers may be invoked.¹⁶

It may be useful to refer to certain classes of cases in which the question of the inherent powers of the Court to act has been discussed —

1. Setting aside ex parte decisions and restoration of suits dismissed for default.

— It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad,¹⁶ Calcutta,¹⁷ Lahore,¹⁸ Madras,¹⁹ Patna²⁰ and Rangoon²¹ and the Judicial Commissioner's Courts of Nagpur, Oudh and Sind²² that there is no inherent power to set aside an ex parte decree or to restore a suit dismissed for default, except under the circumstances and conditions mentioned in O. 9 R. 13 and R. 9 respectively. Where a case is outside the scope of O. 9 R. 13, as where a person, not a party to the suit applies to set aside an ex parte decree under peculiar circumstances, the Rangoon High Court has held that it can set the decree

Apart from execution proceedings a Court has also inherent powers to stay a suit pending the decision in a connected proceeding, apart from Section 10 of the Code.⁴⁴ An Appellate or Revision Court has similarly inherent power to stay further proceedings in the suit in the lower Court apart from O. 41 R. 5 of the Code.⁴⁵ There is a difference of opinion as to whether, where an appeal has been preferred to the Privy Council, the High Court can, under its inherent powers, stay further proceedings in the trial Court apart from O. 45 R. 13. According to the High Courts of Calcutta and Lahore it can.⁴⁶ According to the High Court of Allahabad it has no jurisdiction to do so.⁴⁷ See also the undermentioned cases.⁴⁸

power of a Court to hear an appeal or to review a previous judgment exists only if it is given by statute and therefore when there is no such right given by statute, a Court cannot, under its inherent powers, hear an appeal or review its previous order⁵ or transfer a case.⁶ [But the Court has always power to rectify its own mistakes and where a previous order has been passed under a mistake the Court can rectify such mistake. See Note 6 infra.] Similarly, the High Court has no inherent power of revision over proceedings in subordinate Courts, because the power of revision is a creature of the statute and does not exist if it is not provided for by statute.⁷

O. 9 R. 9 by the heir of the plaintiff the suit was restored. On revision the Judicial Commissioner reversed the order of restoration on the ground that the original dismissal was rightly made on default. On appeal to the Privy Council, Lord Shaw, after stating that the rules and orders applicable to a defaulter could not be applied to a dead man and quoting the words of Section 151, observed "in their Lordships' opinion such abuse has occurred by the course adopted in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. Quite apart from Section 151 any Court might have rightly considered itself to possess an inherent power to rectify the mistake which had been inadvertently made. But Section 151 could never be invoked in a case clearer than the present." It follows from this ruling that where a Court employed a procedure in doing something which it never intended to do and there is miscarriage of justice, there is an abuse of the process of the Court.² The injustice so done must be remedied on the principle actus curiæ neminem gravabit—an act of the Court shall prejudice no person.³ Such an abuse by the Court may arise *either (a) by the default or mistake of the Court itself*⁴

But no act done or proceeding taken as of right and in due course of law, is an abuse of the process of the Court simply because such act or proceeding is likely to embarrass another.¹⁸ A person who brings himself within the terms of a statute is not to be deprived of a right conferred by that statute on "so treacherous a ground of decision as an abuse of the process of the Court."¹⁹ Nor is the failure to conform to a mere rule of practice, an abuse of process in every case; the Court must find in each case what exactly the abuse is.²⁰ It has been held in the undermentioned case²¹ that the expression "abuse of the process" refers only to some process of the Court such as a writ of attachment, taken maliciously to the injury of another. It is submitted that this view is too narrow and is not in accord with the general trend of judicial decisions referred to above.

7. Criminal cases. — Where a Court issues notice to a party to show cause why he should not be proceeded against under Section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, for producing a forged receipt, and the question of forgery is before the High Court on appeal from the proceeding wherein the document was held to be a forgery, the High Court has inherent power to stay the proceedings under Section 476 pending disposal of the appeal.¹ See also the undermentioned cases.²

7a. Contempt of Court, proceedings for. — The High Court as a Superior Court of Record has an inherent power to punish for contempt of Court and that power is not affected in any way by the Codes of Civil or Criminal Procedure.¹ The High Court can also enforce its orders but does not possess the power to arrest for contempt a person outside its general jurisdiction.² It has been held that the High Court has jurisdiction to award costs in a criminal prosecution for contempt of Court and has inherent jurisdiction to order its recovery on the lines on which decrees are executed by the Civil Court.³

8. Insolvency Court. — As has already been observed in Note 1, every Court will, in the absence of express provision in respect of any matter, be deemed to possess, as inherent in its very constitution, all such powers as are necessary to do the right and undo a wrong in the course of the administration of justice.¹ An Insolvency Court has, therefore, inherent powers to pass just and necessary orders in cases not provided for by the Insolvency Act.² This is made clear by Section 5 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, read with Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. An Insolvency Court has thus power to grant ad interim protection before adjudication³ or to rectify mistakes in its proceedings,⁴ or to set aside an ex parte order obtained by fraud or misrepresentation.⁵ It has, however, no power to stay an execution sale going on in another Court⁶ though the latter Court may, on a claim by the Official Receiver under Section 51 or Section 52 of the Insolvency Act, stay the execution under its inherent powers.⁷

See also Note 8b below.

8b. Legal Practitioners Act, cases under. — It has been held that although there is no express provision for a review of an order made under the Legal Practitioners Act, the High Court has inherent power to restore a pleader whose name has been struck off the rolls.¹

9. Appeal. — An order under Section 151 is not an appealable order under Section 104 and no appeal, therefore, lies as an appeal from an order.¹ But if such an order amounts to a decree within the definition of Section 2 sub-section (2), an appeal will lie under Section 96.² Thus an order of remand under Section 151 which amounts to an adjudication under Section 2 (2) is appealable as a decree under Section 96.³ Where an order is made in execution under Section 151 and such order falls within Section 47, an appeal and a second appeal will lie therefrom.⁴ An order under Section 151 can also be challenged under Section 105 if it affects the decision of the case on the merits but not otherwise.⁵

1. Legislative changes.—The third paragraph of Section 206 of the old Code ran as follows —

"If the decree is found to be at variance with the judgment, or if any clerical or arithmetical error be found in the decree, the Court shall, of its own motion or on that of any of the parties, amend the decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment or to correct such error: provided that reasonable notice has been given to the parties or their pleaders of the proposed amendment."

The present Section differs from the above provision in the following respects —

- (1) It does not provide for amendment where the decree is found to be at variance with the judgment. An application to amend the decree, so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment, should, under the present Code, be made to the Court in the exercise of its inherent power which is saved by Section 151.
- (2) The provision as to errors arising from any accidental slip or omission is new. Section 206 of the former Code referred only to clerical or arithmetical errors and errors due to discrepancy between the judgment and decree.
- (3) The present Section has omitted the proviso as to notice being given of the proposed amendment.

2. Amendment of judgments, decrees or orders. — It will be seen from O. 20 R. 3 that a judgment, once signed, cannot be afterwards altered or added to, save as otherwise provided by Section 152 or on review.¹ O. 20 R. 6 provides that the decree shall be drawn up so as to agree with the judgment. Reading this Section with O. 20 Rules 3 and 6, it is clear that as a general rule, a judgment, decree or final order, once drawn up and signed, cannot subsequently be altered, varied or amended in any manner even with the consent of the parties.² The only exceptions to the general rule are the following —

- (1) Under Section 152 a clerical or arithmetical mistake or an error arising from an accidental slip or omission may be corrected by the Court,³ even though the decree is in conformity with the judgment.⁴

- (2) Under the inherent powers of the Court (Section 151) a decree which is at variance with the judgment can be amended so as to agree with the judgment.⁵

Without correcting the decree itself, the Court may, under O. 20 R. 11, order that the payment under a money decree may be made in instalments. A decree if made ex parte may also be set aside by a proceeding under O. 9 R. 13 or a suit in certain circumstances, or in appeal or revision.

Where the Court can amend a decree passed by it, the proper course is to apply for amendment and not to appeal.⁷ But neglect to apply for amendment does not preclude a party from obtaining the same result in appeal.⁸ But an amendment should not be made if it will have the effect of making the decree differ from the judgment. If the same mistakes are made in both the judgment and decree, both should be amended and not the decree alone.⁹

A decree may be amended though the applicant's pleader may have signed the decree.¹⁰

As to the powers of the Court to extend the time fixed by a decree, there is a conflict of opinion. See Section 148, Notes 2 and 3.

In an application to amend a decree or order under this Section, the Court has no power to annul the decree or order itself.¹¹

See also Notes to Order 20 Rule 6.

3. Clerical or arithmetical mistakes and errors arising from accidental slip or omission. — As has been seen in Note 2 above, a Court can always correct clerical or arithmetical mistakes and errors arising from accidental slip or omission even though the decree agrees with the judgment. Thus, where a direction as to costs,¹ or interest,² or leave to bring a fresh suit,³ or a provision fixing the period for payment in a redemption decree,⁴ or a relief asked by the plaintiff,⁵ is inadvertently omitted, the decree may be amended by adding the direction or provision.

2 The following are some instances of accidental slips that may be corrected by the Court under this Section —

- (1) Inadvertently passing a decree for foreclosure instead of one for sale.⁶
- (2) Inadvertently recording an order of dismissal, instead of an order decreeing the suit or appeal.⁷
- (3) Inadvertently misdescribing the property covered by the decree or judgment.³
- (4) Judgment accidentally including the property of a stranger.⁹
- (5) Passing a personal decree against the legal representatives of a party.¹⁰
- (6) Accidentally entering the name of a deceased party instead of his legal representatives who had been brought on the record.¹¹
- (7) Passing an erroneous order as to costs by oversight.¹²

See also the undermentioned cases.¹³

Where by an oversight or accidental slip the name of a wrong person is inserted in the decree as the guardian of a minor party, the Patna High Court has held that the mistake may be corrected under this Section.¹⁴ But where it is not a case of mere misdescription but a case of real non-representation of the minors by the proper guardian, it is a defect of substance and hence the Madras High Court has held¹⁵ that such a defect cannot be cured by substituting the name of the proper guardian under this Section.

Section 152 does not apply where there is no question of clerical or arithmetical mistakes or errors arising from accidental slips and omissions,¹⁶ even though the order correcting what is really a mistake of its ministerial officers by whom the decree or order was drawn up. In In Re Swire, Mellor v. Swire,³ Lindley, L. J., said:

"There is no such magic in passing and entering an order as to deprive the Court of jurisdiction to make its own records true, and if an order, as passed and entered does not express the real order of the Court,"

the Court has ample jurisdiction to set that right. And Bowen, L. J., said:

"Every Court has inherent power over its own records so long as those records are within its power and it can set right any mistake in them. It seems to me that it would be perfectly sneaking if the Court could not rectify an error which is really the error of its own minister. An order, as it seems to me, even when passed and entered, may be amended by the Court as to carry out the intention and express the meaning of the Court at the time when the order was made, provided the amendment be made without injustice, or on terms which preclude injustice."

Thus, where P sues Q and R for a certain sum and judgment is given in favour of P 'as prayed' but the decree as drawn up makes the amount payable by Q alone, the Court can amend the decree so as to bring it in conformity with the judgment.⁴ Similarly, where the judgment gives a mortgage decree in favour of the plaintiff but the decree is wrongly drafted so as to give the decree-holder only a charge on the property, the decree may be amended so as to agree with the judgment.⁵

Where an order which had been dictated but which had been intended to be reconsidered was signed inadvertently, the High Court of Allahabad set aside the order under its inherent powers.⁶

But where the decree as drafted is in accordance with the intention of the judgment and there is no clerical or arithmetical mistake or accidental slip or omission, the Court has no power, either under Section 152 or under its inherent jurisdiction, to amend it⁷ and this is so even if the judgment itself is erroneous in law⁸ and the error is apparent on the face of the judgment.⁹ Thus, where a judgment is passed against G and the decree agrees with the judgment, it cannot be amended so as to convert it into a decree against G and another person.¹⁰

7. "May be corrected." — The amendment of accidental mistakes under this Section cannot be claimed by any party as of right. The matter is left to the discretion of the Court to be exercised in view of the peculiar facts of each case.¹ But the Calcutta High Court has, in the undermentioned case,² held that the word "may" in Section 152 does not make it discretionary with the Court to order the correction but merely enlarges the powers of the Court by providing that such correction can be done at any time. It was, however, conceded in that case that the amendment may be refused when it offended against the principles of equity, for instance, where the interest of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice may be jeopardised. In a later case of the same High Court,³ Suhrawardy, J., adhered to the view taken in the case and further held that where the decree was not in conformity with the judgment owing to an error of the Court, it was incumbent on the Court to order its amendment without regard to any laches on the part of the parties. Graham, J., on the other hand, held that the matter is one of discretion to be exercised in view of the particular facts of each case. In a still later case,⁴ the same High Court held that a decree could be brought into conformity with the judgment even after the lapse of years and that the only limitation is that the Court may deem it inexpedient or inequitable to exercise its power where third parties have acquired rights bona fide, under the erroneous decree.

8. "At any time." — It is a general principle that rules of limitation are applicable to acts to be performed by litigants and not to acts which the Court may or has to perform suo motu.¹ An amendment under this Section falls within the latter class of acts and there is consequently no limitation for an application for amendment under this Section.² The amendment can be made at any time.³ But where satisfaction of a decree has been entered up the Court is functus officio and has no power to amend the decree. An order for amendment in such a case is a mere

Similarly, where third parties have acquired rights under the erroneous decree, for valuable consideration and in ignorance of the error in the decree, no amendment should be allowed so as to prejudice their rights.⁵ The reason is that it would be inequitable to allow amendment of the decree in such a case.⁶ Laches may also, in the particular circumstances of a case, disentitle a party to relief by way of amendment of a decree.⁷

9. Court by which amendment can be made. — Unless and until a decree is superseded in appeal or revision, the Court which passed it is entitled to amend it under this Section.¹ Where an appeal or revision has been preferred from the decree, the power of the Court of first instance to amend the decree depends on the question whether the decree has been superseded by the appellate decree or is left intact. Where the decree of the lower Court is confirmed, reversed or varied, it is superseded by the decree of the Appellate Court, and the only Court that can amend the decree thereafter is the Appellate Court.² But where the decree of the lower Court is left intact, as for instance, where an appeal or revision is dismissed in limine,² or for default,⁴ or where the amendment relates to a portion of the decree which is outside the scope of the appeal⁷ or where the appeal is withdrawn,² the lower Court is entitled to amend the decree. It was held by the High Court of Allahabad in the undermentioned case⁷ that the words "at any time" have a special significance and provide for amendment by the lower Court even where its decree has merged in the decree of the Appellate Court.

There is a conflict of opinion as to the effect of a dismissal of an appeal under O. 41 R. 11 of the Code and as to whether after such dismissal the decree can be amended by the lower Court or can be amended only by the Appellate Court. For a discussion of the question, see Notes to O. 41 R. 11, infra.

Amendment pending appeal against decree.—From what has been said above, it is clear that an amendment can be made by the Court which passed the decree even when an appeal against the decree is pending in a superior Court.⁵ But the Appellate Court can also amend the lower Court's decree under Section 152 read with Section 107 (2) of the Code.⁹

Power of executing Court to amend.—An executing Court has no power, as such, to amend the decree. It cannot go behind the decree but must take the decree as

4 apply for a review of the order.²

It has been held that where a plaintiff applies for the amendment of a decree on the ground that by an accidental slip he mentioned in his plaint the name of a wrong person as the defendant which name has been repeated in the decree, and asking that the decree should be amended by the insertion of the name of the right person, it is open to the Court to amend the decree as prayed for after giving notice to the person whose name is sought to be inserted as that of the defendant and giving him an opportunity to show that the mistake is not accidental or clerical.³

13. Effect of amendment. — An amended decree must be taken as in force from the date of the original decree. There is a distinction between a case of amendment and one of revision or substitution. When an instrument is amended so as to express the real intention which it was intended to express but which it did not completely express, the transaction is not in substance varied but its inaccurate description is only rectified.⁴ Hence, where a decree is amended the amended decree operates as res judicata from the date of the original decree and not from that of the amendment.⁵ But it has been held by the Oudh Chief Court that though the general rule is that an amendment of a decree dates back to the date of the decree, yet the amendment should not be allowed to take effect from the date of the decree so as to affect the rights of a purchaser for value without notice who has acquired the property after the decree but before the making of the amendment.⁶

14. Amendment and limitation. — An amendment of the decree under this Section does not give a fresh starting point of limitation for an appeal or application except an application for the execution of the decree.⁷ Where, however, a party is prejudiced by an amendment but finds that at the date of the amendment, an appeal from the decree is barred if the period is calculated from the original decree, the Court will excuse the delay under Section 5 of the Limitation Act.⁸ Again, where a decree is in conformity with the judgment and the Court has no power to amend the decree under this Section, a party affected by the amendment will be entitled to calculate the time from the date of amendment.³ In the undermentioned case,⁴ the Punjab Chief Court expressed an opinion that the defendants were not bound to appeal from the decree at a time when the plaintiff had, within the period of ninety days allowed for an appeal, applied for an amendment of the decree. No reasons are given for this proposition and the decision, it is submitted, cannot be accepted as correct.

Limitation for the execution of decree. — Article 182 clause (4) of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908) expressly provides that where the decree has been amended, time for execution of it runs from the date of amendment. The following decisions to the contrary, passed under the Limitation Act of 1877, which did not contain such a provision, are no longer good law.⁵ The undermentioned cases⁶ decided under the same Act, in which it was held that the limitation was extended, by treating the order for amendment as one for review of judgment, are only of academic interest at the present time in view of the express provision in Article 182 clause (4).

See also the Authors' Commentaries on the Limitation Act, Article 182 Note 50.

15. Successive applications for amendment—Res judicata. — An application for amendment of a decree is not a suit. Hence, Section 11 of the Code does not apply to such an application. But the principle of res judicata applies to it, Section 11 not being exhaustive. (See Notes under Section 11.) Hence, where an application for amendment has been disposed of on the merits, a subsequent application substantially for the same relief is barred.¹ But where the subsequent application is materially different from the previous application it is not barred.²

mistake in contract cannot be set aside embodied in decree or order under Section.]

Where an amendment is sought on the ground of a subsequent change of circumstances, a suit, and not an application, would be the most appropriate remedy.⁶

As to the maintainability of suits to set aside or correct a consent decree on the ground of mutual mistake of the parties, see Note 16 above.

19. Appeal. — An order granting or refusing an amendment under this Section is not a decree¹ or an appealable order, and consequently, no appeal lies therefrom.² Where, however, there is no clerical or arithmetical mistake or accidental slip or omission, but the whole method of calculation is altered by the amendment, the order, though purporting to be one under Section 152, must be deemed to be one passed on review under Order 47 and hence will be appealable.³

An order of the High Court rejecting an application to amend a decree passed by it on appeal, is not an order made "on appeal" within the meaning of Clause 39 of the Letters Patent (Calcutta), and is not appealable to the Privy Council under that Clause.⁴ As to whether an order of a single Judge of the High Court on an application for amendment is appealable under Clause 15 of the Letters Patent as a "judgment," see Note 6 to Section 104.

The amended decree is always appealable as a decree.⁵ But, as has been seen in Note 14 above, in the case of an amendment under Section 152, no fresh starting point of limitation for appeal is given by the amendment, though the delay may be excused in appropriate cases under Section 5 of the Limitation Act.

Where the Judge instead of amending the decree passes a fresh decree, there is a right of appeal from the amended decree,⁶ but not from the original decree.⁷

20. Revision. — An order granting or refusing an application for amendment under the Section is, as has been observed already in Note 19 above, neither a decree nor an appealable order. Hence, it is open to revision by the High Court in a fit case.¹

1. Legislative changes. — This Section is new. It is based on O. 28 R. 13 of the Rules of the Supreme Court (of England).

2. Scope of the Section. — Section 152 deals with amendments of judgments, decrees and orders. O. 6 R. 17 deals with amendments of pleadings. The present Section confers a general power on the Court to amend any defect or error in any proceeding in a suit and to make all necessary amendments for the purpose of determining the real questions between the parties. The object of the rule allowing amendments is to minimise litigation and avoid multiplicity of proceedings,¹ and also to see that the merest technicality may not be allowed to stand in the way of substantial justice.² Hence, the Court has power to allow all necessary amendments for raising the real questions at issue between the parties provided that no injury or injustice is caused to the opposite party and are such as can be sufficiently compensated for by costs or otherwise.³ But the Court will not aid a party by allowing him to amend his pleading where the mistake was fraudulent or intended to get round a previous decision of the Court.⁴

The power to get an amendment of a proceeding under this Section, is subject to the discretion of the Court, and is not claimable as of right.⁵ As to the general principles guiding the exercise of discretion in granting or refusing an amendment, see Order 6 Rule 17.

3. "At any time." — The power of amendment conferred by this Section can be exercised "at any time" during the proceedings.¹ The power is vested both in the original as well as in the Appellate Court.² But prima facie it is limited to amendments during the actual pendency of proceedings and not after the decree has been drawn up and sealed.³

4. "Defect or error." — Assuming that Section 153 applies to orders of Courts, an order erroneous on the merits is not "a defect or error" in the proceedings within the meaning of the Section, and cannot be amended or corrected under this Section.¹

5. "Any proceeding in a suit." — The term "proceeding" in this Section must be interpreted as including any application to a Court of justice however made, for aid in the enforcement of rights, for reliefs, for redress of injuries, for damages or for any remedial object.¹ See for instance the following —

(i) Pleadings. — See Order 6 Rule 17.

(ii) Memorandum of appeal. — A memorandum of appeal may be amended under this Section.² Thus, when, through a bona fide error, the name of a deceased person instead of that of his legal representative appears in a memorandum of appeal as the respondent, the error may be amended.³ But, it has been held that no such discretion to amend is available to the Court when it is sought to substitute a person for the potential appellant who died before the memorandum of appeal was filed, the reason being that in such a case there is no memorandum of appeal at all in the eye of the law.⁴

(iii) Application for execution. — See Notes to Order 21 Rule 17.

(iv) Application for final decree in a mortgage suit. — The Section applies to the amendment of an application for a final decree in a mortgage suit.⁵

(v) Application for personal decree under O. 34 R. 6. — Under Section 153 an application for a personal decree against the mortgager under O. 34 R. 6 may be amended by allowing a party to sign it, where he has failed to do so in the first instance,⁶ or by allowing the addition of an alternative prayer.⁷

(vi) Application for restitution. — Where an application for restitution has not been made in the correct form, it may be amended under this Section.⁸

(vii) Answers to interrogatories. — Leave may be given in a fit case to amend answers to interrogatories. Thus, an answer containing an admission made by mistake may be amended.⁹ Similarly, an answer may be amended where subsequent to the filing of the affidavit of answer, it is found that there are other matters which could have been included in it.¹⁰

(ix) Notice of motion. — A notice of motion can be amended under this Section.¹³

(x) Power of attorney. — The Court has inherent power to amend a power of attorney filed by the mukhtiar of a party by the insertion of the mukhtiar's name which was omitted by mistake.¹⁴ It has been held in the undermentioned case¹⁵ that Section 153 would apply to such a case.

(xi) Sale certificate. — The present Section prima facie applies to pending proceedings.¹⁶ Section 152 applies to the amendment of decrees and orders. Although a sale certificate is a document issued by a Court, it is doubtful whether it is an order of Court within Section 152. It may also be doubted whether it is a proceeding in a suit within the meaning of the present Section. A Court has, however, inherent power to amend a sale certificate after notice to the judgment-debtor, where the certificate does not correctly describe the property sold,¹⁷ unless the sale price has been affected by such misdescription.¹⁸

See also the undermentioned cases.¹⁹

6. Amendment by Court suo motu. — Under O. 6 R. 17 the Court has no power to amend the pleadings of its own accord. Under the present Section the Court has a power of amendment suo motu. But even under this Section the Court has no power to convert, of its own accord, a suit for declaration into one for possession.¹ The reason is that a Court is bound to adjudicate on a claim as brought and cannot direct parties to alter their claims.²

Synopsis

1. "Any present right of appeal."
2. Right of appeal being given by new Code but not by old Code — Effect on pending proceedings.
3. Other rights accrued before the present Code.
4. Power of Appellate Court.

1. "Any present right of appeal."—It has been observed in Note 3 to the Preamble that the general principle is that an Act which takes away a substantive right is not retrospective in effect except by express enactment or by necessary implication. This principle is recognized in Section 6 of the General Clauses Act of 1897. But this principle does not apply to enactments merely affecting practice or procedure. For, there can be no vested right in any course of procedure. But a right of appeal is a substantive right and not a mere matter of procedure. When the law permits an appeal, the right of appeal vests in a party on the commencement of proceedings in the lower Court. Any Act coming into force subsequently cannot affect this right prejudicially, except by express words or by necessary implications.¹ This is the general rule apart from Section 154. Under this Section the question has arisen whether this general right is restricted by the words "any present right of appeal" in the Section. The question has arisen in this way. Take, for instance, an order which was appealable under the former Code, but is not appealable under the present Code. The present Code came into force on 1st January 1909. Suppose the proceedings in which the order was passed were commenced before 1st January 1909, and also that the order was passed before 1st January 1909. In such a case, there was undoubtedly a present right of appeal accrued to a party at the commencement of the Code (1st January 1909) because the order having already been passed, the right of appeal given by the former Code was capable of being exercised immediately on that date. But suppose, in the above instance, the proceedings were started before 1st January 1909, but the order therein was passed after 1st January 1909. In such a case, no doubt a right of appeal had accrued to the party at the commencement of the present Code, because when the law permits an appeal, the right of appeal vests in a party on the initiation of the proceedings in the lower Court. But as the order had not been passed at the commencement of the Code but was passed only subsequently, the right of appeal was not therefore capable of being immediately exercised at that date. Is such a right, a present right of appeal within Section 154? On this question there is a conflict of decisions. It has been held by the Calcutta High Court,² the Punjab Chief Court³ and the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court⁴ that such a right of appeal cannot be called a present right of appeal because although it has vested in a party, it is not capable of being immediately exercised. But the Madras High Court

This Section and the Fifth Schedule of the Code have been repealed by Act XVII of 1914, Section 3.

The Section as it stood before the repeal was as follows :—

"The enactments mentioned in the fifth Schedule are hereby repealed to the extent specified in the fourth column thereof."

157. [S. 3, second sentence.] Notifications published, declarations and rules made, places appointed, agreements filed, scales prescribed, forms framed, appointments made and powers conferred under Act VIII of 1859 or under any Code of Civil Procedure or any Act amending the same or under any other enactment hereby repealed shall, so far as they are consistent with this Code, have the same force and effect as if they had been respectively published, made, appointed, filed, prescribed, framed and conferred under this Code and by the authority empowered thereby in such behalf.

Continuance of orders under repealed enactments.

Synopsis

1. "Rules."
2. "Consistent with the Code."
3. Retrospective effect of the Code. See Note 3 to Preamble.

1. "Rules." — The expression "rules made" means rules properly and validly made, in other words, made with jurisdiction by the proper authority. Rules, which though purporting to be made under the old Code, were beyond the powers given by the old Code, do not become valid by reason of the fact that, if they had been made under the new Code, they would be valid.¹

2. "Consistent with the Code." — The word 'Code' according to the definition in Section 2 clause 1 includes the rules in the First Schedule. Hence, it has been held that the Madras Civil Rules of Practice made by the High Court under the Code of 1882 but not re-enacted and published in accordance with the procedure prescribed in Part X of the Code of 1908 are invalid if and in so far as they are inconsistent with any of the rules in the First Schedule of the later Code.¹

A. I. R. COMMENTARIES JUDICIALLY NOTICED

A. I. R. 1933 Peshawar 61 at 62.

"The law on the subject is lucidly summed up in Chitaley's Commentary on Civil Procedure Code, Vol. 1, p. 182, and is stated as follows: 'A party them.'"

A. I. R. 1934 Allahabad 253 at 255.

" the reason being that no one can have vested right in forms of procedure. The subject is discussed in Chitaley's Civil Procedure Code, Vol. 1, pp. 4 and 5."

A. I. R. 1934 Peshawar 40 at 42.

"The argument is based on Chitaley's Commentary, 1933 Edition, p. 1888 under O. 21, R. 15 of the Code, which is supported by Gopendra Krishna v. Moti Lal, A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 559."

A. I. R. 1934 Peshawar 57 at 61.

"These conflicting views are noted on pp. 746 and 747 of Chitaley's Civil Procedure Code."

A. I. R. 1934 Peshawar 94 at 95.

"He (D. J.) quotes from Chitaley as follows: 'All co-promisees as parties.'"

"I have no disagreement with this statement of the law, but in the present case the defendant is not a promisee, but a promisor. A further passage from Chitaley is cited by the learned Additional District Judge to the following effect :

'Where several of suits.'

"That statement of law applies to the facts of the present case."

A. I. R. 1936 Allahabad 811 at 813.

"The ruling cases on this point are collected and noted in Chitaley's Civil Procedure Code, Vol. 3, p. 2318, 2nd Edn."

I. L. R. 1937 Nag. 230 at 234.

"The point is well summed up at pages 2469 and 2470 of Chitaley and Rao's Code of Criminal Procedure, Vol. 3, and the learned authors rightly point out that the view of the High Courts, excepting Rangoon, is consistent with the principles underlying sub-section 3 of the section."

A. I. R. 1936 Peshawar 37 at 37.

"Counsel for the appellants quotes from Chitaley's Commentary to the effect that where the question of costs has been referred to the arbitrator, or where the whole matter in dispute has been referred to the arbitrator, the arbitrator has authority to award costs in the award."

A. I. R. 1936 Peshawar 209 at 210.

A. I. R. 1937 Allahabad 82 at 87.

"The balance of authority seems to be that an Appellate Court has no power under it to interfere to the prejudice of a person who was a party to a suit, but who was not impleaded in the appeal: vide "Code of Civil Procedure," Chitaley & Annaji Rao, Vol. 3, pp. 3003-3004 (1st Edn). I am, therefore, of opinion that defendants 2-7 ought not to have been impleaded."

A. I. R. 1937 Calcutta 222 at 224.

"On this point there is a considerable mass of case law which will be found set out in Chitaley's Commentary on the Civil Procedure Code."

A. I. R. 1937 Lahore 41 at 49 =

I. L. R. 1937 Lah. 11 at 33.

"I find it stated in Chitaley and Annaji Rao's Code of Civil Procedure that this section (i. e., S. 80) like S. 79 enacts only a rule of procedure. With this view I agree."

I. L. R. 1937 Nag. 277 at 284.

"This question has been well discussed in Note 10 under S. 162, p. 804, of Chitaley and Annaji Rao's recent Commentary on the Criminal Procedure Code. The learned authors favour the view of the Madras and Calcutta High Courts which is in accordance with the opinion expressed

I. L. R. 1938 Nag. 280 at 282.

"In Chitaley and Rao's Civil Procedure Code, Edn. 2, p. 2094 under O. 22, R. 1, it is remarked :

'If, in the first Court, the
..... either party.'

"I agree with these remarks which would apply to a dismissal of the suit in appeal. It is further remarked on the authority of 34 Mad loc. cit. that the appeal cannot be continued even in respect of costs or other relief which are merely incidental to the main reliefs. I accordingly uphold the contention of the respondent."

I. L. R. 1937 Nag. 519 at 520.

A. I. R. 1937 Oudh 481 at 483 =

I. L. R. 13 Luck. 560 at 565 & 566.

"Messrs. Chitaley and Annaji Rao in their Commentary on the Code express the opinion that the present cl. (d) of R. 5 of O. 33 gives effect to the view taken in the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in 7 All 661, and other cases."

A. I. R. 1937 Peshawar 13 at 15.

"In this connexion we may quote the following Note No. 4 from Mr. Chitaley's Commentary under R. 53 which is as follows: 'Other decrees. — A decree this rule.'"

A. I. R. 1937 Peshawar 41 at 41.

"On p. 1480 of Mr. Chitaley's Commentary on the Civil Procedure Code (Edn. 1) it is noted that 'where a plaint is presented on the re-opening date after court-holidays and the period of limitation has expired during the holidays, the fact that the ground of exemption under S. 4, Limitation Act, was not specifically mentioned in the plaint will not entail the dismissal of the suit inasmuch as the Court is bound to take judicial notice of the holidays.' This note is supported by reference to rulings in Nagpur, Lahore, Madras and Calcutta Courts, though a Calcutta ruling to contrary is also noted. The proposition as stated appears to me to be correct."

A. I. R. 1937 Peshawar 81 at 81.

"Learned counsel has been unable to show me any decided case in which action of that nature amounts to a public nuisance, and the commentary in Chitaley's Civil Procedure Code certainly indicates the contrary."

A. I. R. 1937 Rangoon 391 at 392.

"The learned authors of the Code of Criminal Procedure by Chitaley and Annaji-rao, Edn. 1, Vol. 1, at p. 200 say : 'Thus an ... Proviso.'

"I agree with this view."

A. I. R. 1938 Calcutta 287 at 289 & 290 =

I. L. R. (1938) 1 Cal. 53 at 58 and 60.

"In the Note to Messrs. Chitaley and Annaji Rao's Code of Civil Procedure, at p. 1388, I find the following comment : 'The first parties.'

"The learned authors of Chitaley and Annaji Rao's Code of Civil Procedure in the paragraph to which I have already referred, appear to me to sum up in a few words the substance of the decisions."

I. L. R. (1939) 1 Cal. 112 at 120.

A. I. R. 1938 Lahore 220 at 222.

"(The amended Rule will be found printed at pp. 252-3 of Chitaley's Code of Civil Procedure, Edn. 2.)"

A. I. R. 1938 Lahore 345 at 346.

"The learned counsel for the present respondents also quoted A. I. R. 1932 All. 446, A. I. R. 1933 All. 264 (a judgment by a Full Bench, one member of which was the present Hon'ble Chief Justice of the Lahore High Court) and the remarks in the Commentary of Mr. Chitaley's Criminal Procedure Code, Vol. 1, p. 676."

A. I. R. 1938 Nagpur 122 at 123.

"It was assumed by the Taxing Judge (Bose J.) in his order of reference that the present case was similar because he assumed that there was no difference for these purposes between a plaint and a memorandum of appeal. This we think is wrong although there are a larger number of rulings collected at p. 44 of Vol. 1 of Chitaley's Civil Procedure Code which take that view."

A. I. R. 1938 Oudh 45 at 47 and 48 =
I. L. R. 13 Luck. 689 at 693 and 695.

"The learned counsel (for appellant) maintained that that case stands alone, and he has pointed out to us that in the Commentary on the Civil Procedure Code by Chitaley and Annaji Rao this case is submitted to have been wrongly decided: vide the Commentary, Vol. 1, (Edn. 2) p. 478, (Note 9, F. "As has been pointed out in Chitaley's discussion of this matter in his Notes to S. 115 at pages 924 and 925 of Vol. 1, Edn. 2 of the Civil P. C., the Allahabad view originally depended on a distinction between cases in which the application had been rejected and cases where it had been accepted."

A. I. R. 1938 Peshawar 4 at 5.

"The general result of this conflict has been clearly set out in Note No. 9 of the commentary on that Rule in Chitaley's Code
